

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at http://books.google.com/

Million of Vision

THE

HISTORY

0F

CHRISTIANITY.

VOL. III.

London:
Printed by A. Spottiswoods,
New-Street-Square.

HISTORY

OF

CHRISTIANITY,

FROM

THE BIRTH OF CHRIST

. 10

THE ABOLITION OF PAGANISM IN THE ROMAN EMPIRE.

BY

THE REV. H. H. MILMAN, PRESENDARY OF ST. PETER'S, AND MINISTER OF ST. MARGARET'S, WESTMINSTER.

IN THREE VOLUMES.

VOL. III.

LONDON:
JOHN MURRAY, ALBEMARLE STREET.

MDCCCXL.

0P

THE THIRD VOLUME.

BOOK III.

CHAPTER V.

CHRISTIANITY UNDER THE SON'S OF CONSTANTINE.

				1	Page
Accession of the Sons	of Constant	ine	-	•	1
Religious Differences of				-	2
Moral more slow than H	Religious R	evolutio	ı -	-	4
Athanasius -	-	-	-	-	7
Restoration of Athanas	ius to Alex	andria (A. D. 338)	-	9
Council at Antioch (A.		• `	- ´	-	9
Athanasius flies to Ron	ne -		-	-	11
Usurpation of Gregory	-	-	_	-	11
Bloody Quarrel at Cons	tantinople	-	-	-	12
Effects of the Trinitaria	n Controve	ersy in tl	ne West	-	13
Athanasius at Rome	-	-	•		14
Julius, Bishop of Rome	•	•		-	14
Synod at Rome - at N	Ilian (A. D.	343.)	•	-	15
Council of Sardica (A. 1	D. 345, 346	.)		-	15
Rival Council at Philipp	popolis	•	•	-	16
Reconciliation of Const		Athana	sius (A. D.	349.)	16
Persian War	-	•		_	18
Death of Constans	•	-	•	_	18
War with Magnentius	(A. D. 351.)		-	_	18
Battle of Mursa	•	-	-	-	19
Paul deposed from the	Bishopric o	f Consta	ntinople –	- Ma-
cedonius re-instate			• •	-	20
Councils of Arles and N	I ilan	•	-		20
Persecution of Liberius		Rome		-	20
	• •	•

							Page
New Charges against A	thans	sius		-		_	21
Council of Milan	-	-	•		•	_	22
Fall of Liberius -		-	-			_	24
of Hosius -		-		•	-	_	25
Reception of Constanti	us at	Rom	e	-	-	-	25
Orders to remove Atha			-		•	-	2 6
Tumult in the Church	of Al	exand	lria		-	_	27
George of Cappadocia		-	-		-	-	2 8
Escape and Retreat of	Atha	n as iu:	8	-	•	-	3 0
Hilary of Poitiers	-		•		-	-	32
Lucifer of Cagliari	•		-	-	•	-	32
Mutual Accusations of	Crue	lty	-			-	35
Athanasius as a Writer		•		-	-	-	3 8
Necessity of Creeds du						-	40
Influence of the Athans	asian	Cont	roversy	on t	ne Growtl	n of the Papal Power		-	•		-	-	40
Superiority of Arianisn	on,		-	•	-	-	42
Heresy of Aetius	-		-		-	-	43
of Macedonius		•	-		-	-	44
Council of Rimini	-	•	-	•	-	-	45
	СНА	APTE	ER VI.
		TULIA	N.
Short Reign of Julian	(A. D.	361-	–363.)		•	-	5 0
His Character	`-		. ′		•	-	51
His Religion -		•		•	-	-	53
Unfavourable State of	Chris	tianit	٧	-	•	-	54
Julian's Education		•	•		•	_	50
Intercourse wi	th th	e Phi	losophe	rs	•	-	58
Conduct of Constantiu	s tow	ards	hjm .	-	•	-	60
Julian at Athens	•	•		•	•	-	62
initiated at Elev	sis	-	•	•	•	-	63
Julian's Elevation to th	ie ran	k of (Cæsar		-	-	64
Death of Constantius		-		-	-	-	64
Conduct of Julian	•	•	-	-	•	-	65
Restoration of Paganis	m	•				-	68

		Page
Julian's new Priesthood	-	72
charitable Institutions imitated from Christianit	y -	79
Ritual	-	74
Respect for Temples	-	74
Plan of Religious Instruction -	-	78
animal Sacrifices	-	75
Philosophers	-	77
Maximus	-	78
Julian's Toleration	-	80
sarcastic Tone	-	81
Taunts of the Christians' Professions of Poverty	, -	82
Withdrawal of their Privileges	-	82
Exclusion of them from public Education -	-	82
Education of the higher Classes	-	83
Arts of Julian to undermine Christianity -	-	86
Persecutions	-	86
Restoration of Temples	•	88
Julian contends on ill-chosen Ground	-	88
Constantinople — Antioch	-	89
Julian at Antioch	-	90
Temple on Mount Casius. — Grove of Daphne	_	91
Remains of Babylas	_	92
Fire in the new-built Temple	-	93
Alexandria	-	93
George, the Arian Bishop	-	94
His Death	_	95
Athanasius	-	96
Death of Mark of Arethusa	-	98
Julian courts the Jews	-	98
determines to rebuild the Temple at Jerusalem	-	99
Writings of Julian	-	102
His Work against Christianity	-	103
The "Misopogon"	-	104
fulian sets forth on his Persian Expedition -	_	105
Death of Julian	_	105
robable Results of his Conflict with Christianity	-	107

CHAPTER VII.

VALENTINIAN AND VALENS.

Lamentations of the Pagans a	t the E	eath (of Julian	Pag - 109
Reign of Jovian -		_	or o anni	- 110
Valentinian and Valens		-	-
	- 004	、 -	-	- 110
Toleration of Valentinian (A. 1	D. 304.	, .	•	- 111
Laws of Valentinian -		•	-	- 119
Prosecutions for Magic	-	-	•	- 119
Cruelty of Valentinian -		-	-	· - 114
Triels in Rome before Maximi	n	-	-	- 113
Connection of these crimes wit	h Paga	ınism	_	- 117
Rebellion of Procopius in the H	East (A	. р. 36	35.)	- 119
State of Christianity in the East	st `	•		- 113 - 124
Interview of Valens with Basil	-		_
Effects of Christianity in mitigs	iting th	e Evi	la of Bonh	- 125
Influence of the Clergy -	В	271	IN OI DALD	• influence of the Cicigy		TTL:	•	- 129
Their Importance in the new S	tate or	Tuing	78 -	- 130
Influence of Christianity on Lit			•	- 131
on Lar	iguage	_	• •	- 132
on the	Munic	cipal J	nstitution	8 - 132
on gen	eral H	abits	-	- 134
Early Christianity among the G	oths			- 135
Ulphilas's Version of the Scripts	ures		_
Arianism of the Goths -		_	-	- 136
Virginistri or the Cours			•	- 138
СНАРТЕ	er vo	11

THEODOSIUS. - ABOLITION OF PAGANISM.

Hostility of Theodosius to Paganism	-	- 143
Alienation of the Revenue of the Temples		- İ47
Oration of Libanius	•	- 148
Avrian Temples destroyed .	-	- 148
aple of Serapis, at Alexandria	_	- 148 - 150
hip of Serapis	_	- 150

				Page
Statue of Serapis -	-	•	•	- 152
The first Attacks on Paganism	1	_	-	- 153
Olympus, the Philosopher		-	•	- 154
War in the City -	-	•	-	- 154
Flight of Olympus -		-	-	- 155
Rescript of Theodosius	-	-	-	- 155
The Temple assailed -		•	-	- 1 5 6
The Statue -	-	•	-	- 157
Paganism at Rome -	-	-	•	- 162
Gratian Emperor (A. D. 367.)				- 165
refuses the Pontificate	е	-	•	- 165
Statue of Victory -		•	•	- 166
Apology of Symmachus	_		-	- 169
Reply of Ambrose -		•	•	- 171
Murder of Valentinian (A. D.	392.) -	•	- 173
Accession of Eugenius	-	•	-	- 173
Law of Honorius -	-	-	-	- 179
Capture of Rome by Alaric		•	•	- 181

CHAPTER IX.

THEODOSIUS. — TRIUMPH OF TRINITARIANISM. — THE GREAT PRELATES OF THE EAST.

Orthodoxy of Theodosius -	•	•	- 185
Laws against Heretics (A. D. 380.)			- 185
All the more powerful ecclesiastical Wr	iters	favourable	to
Trinitarianism		-	- 186
Theophilus of Alexandria, Bishop (A. D	. 385	4 12.)	- 188
St. Ephrem, the Syrian -	-	-	- 190
Cappadocia	-	-	- 193
St. Basil	••	•	- 194
Gregory of Nazianzum -		•	- 196
His Poems	-	-	- 197
Characteristic Difference between Gr	eek	and Christ	ian
Poetry	-	•	- 197
Value of Gregory's Poems -	_	-	- 198
Gregory, Bishop of Sasima (A. D. 372.)		•	- 199

	Page
Gregory, Bishop of Constantinople (A. D. 339-379.)	- 200
Chrysostom	- 205
his Life	- 206
Riots in Antioch	- 211
Interoession of Flavianus for the Rioters -	- 213
Sentence of Theodosius	- 214
Issue of the interview of Flavianus with the Emperor	- 216
Chrysostom, Bishop of Constantinople (A. D. 398.)	- 217
Difference of the Sacerdotal Power in Rome and Consta	nti-
nople	- 2 18
Political Difficulties of Chrysostom	- 220
Interference of the Clergy in secular Affairs -	- 220
Entropius the Eunuch	- 222
Richt of Asylum	- 222
Chrysostom saves the Life of Eutropius	- 224
is governed by his Deacon Serapion	- 225
Theophilus of Alexandria	- 227
Council of the Oak	- 22 8
Condemnation of Chrysostom	- 230
He leaves Constantinople	- 231
Earthquake	- 231
Return of Chrysostom	- 232
Statue of the Empress	- 234
Second Condemnation of Chrysostom -	- 234
Tumults in the Church (A. D. 404.)	- 235
('hrysostom surrenders	- 236
His Seclusion and Death	- 237
His Remains transported to Constantinople "	- 238
CHAPTER X.
THE GREAT PRELATES OF THE WEST.
Ambrose, Archbishop of Milan	- 041
his Youth	- 241 - 242 is made Bishop (A. D. 374.)
an Advocate of Celibacy	243
his Redemption of Captives	244 245
	240

	Page
Ambrose disputes with the Empress Justina -	- 247
compels the Emperor to yield -	- 249
his second Embassy to the Usurper Maxim	us - 254
Accession of Theodosius (A. D. 338.)	- 255
Jewish Synagogue destroyed	- 256
Conduct of Ambrose	- 256
Massacre of Thessalonica (A. D. 390.)	- 2 58
First Capital Punishment for Religion (A. D. 385.)	- 260
Priscillian and his Followers	- 261
Martin of Tours	- 261
Death of Valentinian (A. D. 392.)	- 262 of Theodosius (A. D. 395.)	- 262
of Ambrose (A. D. 397.)	- 262
Augustine	- 263
Augustinian Theology	- 264
Augustine's Baptism (A. D. 387.)	- 276 controversial Writings	- 276
"City of God"	- 277
Life and Character	- 282
CHAPTER XI.
JEROME. — THE MONASTIC SYSTEM.
Monachism	- 289
Cœnobitism	- 290
Origin of Monachism	- 291
Celibacy	- 292
Causes which tended to promote Monachism -	- 294
Antony	- 297
Self-torture	- 301
Influence of Antony	- 303
Cœnobitic Establishments	- 305
Dangers of Cœnobitism	- 307
Bigotry	- 307
Fanaticism	- 308
Ignorance	- 309
General Effects of Monachism on Christianity	- 311
on Political Affairs	- 312

	Page
Some of its Advantages	- 314
Effect on the Maintenance of Christianity -	- 316
Influence on the Clergy	- 319
in promoting Celibacy	- 320
Life of Jerome	- 323
Trials in his Retreat	- 324
His Return to Rome	- 32 6
Morality of the Roman Clergy	- 327
Jerome's Influence over the Females	- 3 2 8
Character of Roman Females	- 32 9
Paula	- 330
Controversies of Jerome	- 331
Retreat to Palestine	- 332
Jovinian and Vigilantius	- 332

BOOK IV.

CHAPTER I.

THE ROMAN EMPIRE UNDER CHRISTIANITY.

General Survey of	the Cl	ange	effec	ted i	y C	hristianity	•	941
Sources of Informa	tion	_	-		•	-	-	342
Theodosian Code		-		-		-	-	342
Christian Writers	-		-		-	-	-	342
Slavery -	•	-		-		-	-	343
Manners of the Co	urt	•		-		-	-	345
Government of Eu	nuchs		-			-	-	345
The Emperor	-	-		-		-	-	346
The Aristocracy	-		-	-		-	-	348
Their Manners	-	-		-	-	-	-	349
The Females	-		-	-		-	-	350
Gradual Developm				rchic	al Po	wer	-	353
Expulsion or Exco	mmuni	cation	1	-		-	-	358

			Page
Increase of Priestly Civil Influence	-	•	- 359
The Bishop in the early Communit		-	- 360
Dissensions in the Church Cause o	f Increase	of Sacerd	otal
Power		-	- 360
Language of the Old Testament	-	•	- 363
Clergy and Laity -	-	-	- 363
Change in the Mode of electing th	e Priestho	od -	- 366
Metropolitan Bishops -	•	•	- 367
Formation of the Diocese	-	-	- 367
Chorepiscopi	-	•	- 368
Archbishops and Patriarchs	-	-	- 369
Church of Rome		-	- 370
New sacred Offices -	•	_	- 372
Unity of the Church -	-	•	- 373
General Councils	-	-	- 373
Increase in Pomp -		•	- 375
Wealth of the Clergy -	-	•	- 378
Uses to which it was applied		-	- 378
Law of Constantine empowering	the Chur	ch to rec	eive
Bequests			- 380
Restrictive Edict of Valentinian	-	-	- 380
Pope Damasus -		-	- 380
Application of Church Wealth	•	_	- 382
Celibacy of the Clergy -	-	_	- 383
Married Bishops and Clergy	-	_	- 388
Moral Consequences of Celibacy	•	-	- 389
Mulieres subintroductæ -	-	-	- 389
Union of Church and State		-	- 391
The State under Ecclesiastical Dis	scipline	-	- 396
Divorce	-	•	- 398
Wills	-	-	- 400
Penitential Discipline -	-	-	- 401
Excommunication -	-	•	- 404
Synesius	•	•	- 405
Ecclesiastical Censures chiefly cor	ifined to H	eresy	- 408
executed b	y the Stat	e	- 408
Civil Punishment for Ecclesiastica		-	- 409
Objects of the great Defenders of		rchical Po	ower 411
Dignity and Advantages of the Cle			- 419
General Influence of the Clergy	•	•	- 414

CHAPTER II.

PUBLIC SPECTACLES.

Religious Ceremonial Divisions of the Church
The Porch. — The Penitents
The Narthex
The Preacher
Secrecy of the Sacraments
Baptism
Eucharist
Christian Funerals
Worship of the Martyrs
Festivals	•
Profane Spectacles
Heathen Calendar	•
Theoretica
Four Kinds of Spectacles
Gymnastic Games	•
Tragedy and Comedy
Mimes
Pantomimes
Amphitheatre. — Gladiatorial Shows -
The Circus. — Chariot Races
CHAPTER III.
CHRISTIAN LITERATURE.
Fate of Greek Literature and Language - Roman Literature and Language -	•
Christian Literature
Poetry	•
Sacred Writings	•
Legends
Spurious Gospels	•
pharom gobers	-

T' 00 ' .		Page
Lives of Saints	-	- 473
History	-	- 474
Apologies	-	- 476
Hermeneutics	•	- 477
Expositions of Faith	-	- 478
Polemical Writings	-	- 478
Christian Oratory	-	- 479
CHAPTER IV.
CHRISTIANITY AND THE FINE A	RTS.
ine Arts	_	- 486
Architecture	٠.	- 488
Windows	•	- 489
Subdivisions of the Church -	-	- 490
Sculpture	_	- 493
Symbolism	٠ 🕳	- 498
Person of the Saviour	•	- 502
Earliest Images Gnostic	_	- 5 05
Earliest Portraits of the Saviour -	-	- 507
The Father rarely represented -	•	- 5 08
The Virgin	•	- 5 09
The Apostles	•	- 512
Martyrdom not represented	-	- 5 13
The Crucifix	-	- 515
Paintings at Nola	•	- 5 16
Music	•	- 5 18
CHAPTER V.
CONCLUSION.
Christian Theology of the Period - Separation of Christian Faith and Christian	- Morals no
complete	•	- 528
Christian Feelings never extinct	•	- 529
Mythic Age of Christianity -	•	- 5 31

Faith	-	-	-	-
[magin a ti v e	State of	he Humai	n Mind	-
Religious I			-
Effect on N			-	_
Polytheistic			. v -
Worship of			_	- the Virgin		-

ERRATA.

Page 399. line 9 of note, for "—" read "he."
—— 537. line 5. for "though" read "through."

HISTORY

CHRISTIANITY.

BOOK III.

CHAPTER V.

CHRISTIANITY UNDER THE SONS OF CONSTANTINE.

IF Christianity was making such rapid progress in the conquest of the world, the world was making fearful reprisals on Christianity. By enlisting new Accession passions and interests in its cause, religion surren- of the sons of Constandered itself to an inseparable fellowship with those tine. passions and interests. The more it mingles with the tide of human affairs, the more turbid becomes the stream of Christian history. In the intoxication of power, the Christian, like ordinary men, forgot his original character; and the religion of Jesus, instead of diffusing peace and happiness through society, might, to the superficial observer of human affairs, seem introduced only as a new element of discord and misery into the society of man.

The Christian emperor dies; he is succeeded by his sons, educated in the faith of the Gospel. The first act of the new reign is the murder of one of the brothers, and of the nephews of the deceased sovereign, who were guilty of being named in the (, VOL. III.

BOOK III.

will of Constantine as joint heirs to the empire. This act, indeed, was that of a ferocious soldiery, though the memory of Constantius is not free from the suspicion, at least of connivance in these bloody deeds. Christianity appears only in a favourable light as interposing between the assassins and their victim. Marcus, Bishop of Arethusa, saved Julian from his enemies: the future apostate was concealed under the altar of the church. Yet, on the accession of the sons of Constantine, to the causes of fraternal animosity usual on the division of a kingdom between several brothers, was added that of religious hostility. The two Emperors (for they were speedily reduced to two) placed themselves at the head of the two contending parties in Christianity. The weak and voluptuous Constans adhered with inflexible firmness to the cause of Athanasius; the no less weak and tyrannical Constantius, to that of Arianism. The East was arrayed against the West. At Rome, at Alexandria, at Sardica, and, afterwards, at Arles and Milan, Athanasius was triumphantly acquitted; at Antioch, at Philippopolis, and finally at Rimini, he was condemned with almost equal unanimity. Even within the church itself, the distribution of the superior dignities became an object of fatal ambition and strife. The streets of Alexandria and of Constantinople were deluged with blood by the partisans of rival bishops. In the latter, an officer of high distinction, sent by the Emperor to quell the tumult, was slain, and his body treated with the utmost indignity by the infuriated populace.

Religious differences of the two surviving

To dissemble or to disguise these melancholy facts, is alike inconsistent with Christian truth and wisdom. In some degree they are accounted for by the proverbial reproach against history, that it is the record of human folly and crime; and history, when the world became impregnated with Christianity, did not at once assume a higher office. fact, it extends its view only over the surface of society, below which, in general, lie human virtue and happiness. This would be especially the case with regard to Christianity, whether it withdrew from the sight of man, according to the monastic interpretation of its precepts, into solitary communion with the Deity, or, in its more genuine spirit. was content with exercising its humanising influence in the more remote and obscure quarters of the general social system.

Even the annals of the church take little notice of those cities where the Christian episcopate passed calmly down through a succession of pious and beneficent prelates, who lived and died in the undisturbed attachment and veneration of their Christian disciples, and respected by the hostile Pagans; men whose noiseless course of beneficence was constantly diminishing the mass of human misery, and improving the social, the moral, as well as the religious condition of mankind. But an election contested with violence, or a feud which divided a city into hostile parties, arrested the general attention, and was perpetuated in the records, at first of the church, afterwards of the empire.

CHAP. V.

'hris ween its doctrines and its moral perfection. Its thaogmatic purity was the sole engrossing subject; v the unity of doctrine superseded and obscured all other considerations, even of that sublimer unity of principles and effects, of the loftiest views of the divine nature, with the purest conceptions of human Faith not only overpowered, but discarded from her fellowship, Love and Peace. where there was exaggeration of one of the constituent elements of Christianity; that exaggeration which is the inevitable consequence of a strong impulse upon the human mind. Wherever men feel strongly, they act violently. The more speculative Christians, therefore, who were more inclined, in the deep and somewhat selfish solicitude for their own salvation, to isolate themselves from the infected mass of mankind, pressed into the extreme of asceticism; the more practical, who were earnest in the desire of disseminating the blessings of religion throughout society, scrupled little to press into their service whatever might advance their cause. With both extremes, the dogmatical part of the religion predominated. The monkish believer imposed the same severity upon the aberrations of the mind as upon the appetites of the body; and, in general, those who are severe to themselves, are both disposed and think themselves entitled to enforce the same severity on others. The other, as his sphere became more extensive, was satisfied with an adhesion to the Christian creed, instead of that total change of life demanded of the early Christian, and watched over with such CHAP. V.

MINTORY OF CHRISTIANITY.

but in fact, the theological opinions of Chrisnaturally made more rapid progress than as moral influence. The former had only to overpower the resistance of a religion which had already lost its hold upon the mind, or a philosophy too speculative for ordinary understandings, and too unsatisfactory for the more curious and enquiring: it had only to enter, as it were, into a vacant place in the mind of man. But the moral influence had to contest, not only with the natural dispositions of man, but with the barbarism and depraved manners of ages. While, then, the religion of the world underwent a total change; the church rose on the ruins of the temple, and the pontifical establishment of Paganism became gradually extinct, or suffered violent suppression; the moral revolution was far more slow and far less complete. large portion of mankind, it must be admitted that the religion itself was Paganism under another form and with different appellations; with another part, it was the religion passively received, without any change in the moral sentiments or habits; with a third, and, perhaps, the more considerable part, there was a transfer of the passions and the intellectual activity to a new cause.* They were completely identified with Christianity, and to a certain degree actuated by its principles, but they did not apprehend the beautiful harmony which subsists

" If," said the dying Bishop of man versed in the affairs of the Constantinople, "you would have for my successor a man who would interests of the religion, your sufinterests of the religion, your suf-frages must be given to Macedo-nius." Socr.

edify you by the example of his life, and improve you by the purity of his precepts, choose Paul; if a between its doctrines and its moral perfection. Its dogmatic purity was the sole engrossing subject; the unity of doctrine superseded and obscured all other considerations, even of that sublimer unity of principles and effects, of the loftiest views of the divine nature, with the purest conceptions of human Faith not only overpowered, but discarded from her fellowship, Love and Peace. where there was exaggeration of one of the constituent elements of Christianity; that exaggeration which is the inevitable consequence of a strong impulse upon the human mind. Wherever men feel strongly, they act violently. The more speculative Christians, therefore, who were more inclined, in the deep and somewhat selfish solicitude for their own salvation, to isolate themselves from the infected mass of mankind, pressed into the extreme of asceticism; the more practical, who were earnest in the desire of disseminating the blessings of religion throughout society, scrupled little to press into their service whatever might advance their cause. With both extremes, the dogmatical part of the religion predominated. The monkish believer imposed the same severity upon the aberrations of the mind as upon the appetites of the body; and, in general, those who are severe to themselves, are both disposed and think themselves entitled to enforce the same severity on others. The other, as his sphere became more extensive, was satisfied with an adhesion to the Christian creed, instead of that total change of life demanded of the early Christian, and watched over with such

CHAP. V. BOOK III. jealous vigilance by the mutual superintendence of a small society. The creed, thus become the sole test, was enforced with all the passion of intense zeal, and guarded with the most subtle and scrupulous jealousy. In proportion to the admitted importance of the creed, men became more sternly and exclusively wedded to their opinions. an antagonist principle of exclusiveness co-existed with the most comprehensive ambition. While they swept in converts indiscriminately from the palace and the public street; while the Emperor and the lowest of the populace were alike admitted on little more than the open profession of allegiance, they were satisfied if their allegiance in this respect was blind and complete. Hence a far larger admixture of human passions, and the common vulgar incentives of action, were infused into the expanding Men became Christians, orthodox Christian body. Christians, with little sacrifice of that which Christianity aimed chiefly to extirpate. Yet, after all, this imperfect view of Christianity had probably some effect in concentrating the Christian community, and holding it together by a new and more indissoluble bond. The world divided into two parties. Though the shades of Arianism, perhaps, if strictly decomposed, of Trinitarianism, were countless as the varying powers of conception or expression in man, yet they were soon consolidated into two compact The semi-Arians, who approximated so closely to the Nicene creed, were forced back into the main body. Their fine distinctions were not seized by their adversaries, or by the general body of the Christians. The bold and decisive definitiveness of the Athanasian doctrine admitted less, discretion; and no doubt, though political vicissitudes had some influence on the final establishment of their doctrines, the more illiterate and less imaginative West was predisposed to the Athanasian opinions by its natural repugnance to the more vague and dubious theory. All, however, were enrolled under one or the other standard, and the party which triumphed, eventually would rule the whole Christian world.

Even the feuds of Christianity at this period, though with the few more dispassionate and reasoning of the Pagans they might retard its progress, in some respects contributed to its advancement; they assisted in breaking up that torpid stagnation which brooded over the general mind. It gave a new object of excitement to the popular feeling. The ferocious and ignorant populace of the large cities, which found a new aliment in Christian faction for their mutinous and sanguinary outbursts of turbulence, had almost been better left to sleep on in the passive and undestructive quiet of Pagan indifference. They were dangerous allies, more than dangerous, fatal to the purity of the Gospel.

Athanasius stands out as the prominent charac- Athanater of the period, in the history, not merely of Christianity, but of the world. That history is one long controversy, the life of Athanasius one unwearied and incessant strife.* It is neither the serene course of a being elevated by his religion above the cares and tumults of ordinary life, nor the restless activity of one perpetually employed in a conflict with the ignorance, vice, and misery of an unconverted people. Yet even now (so completely has this polemic spirit become incorporated with Christianity) the memory of Athanasius is regarded by many wise and good men with reverence, which, in Catholic countries, is actual adoration, in Protestant, approaches towards it.* It is impossible, indeed, not to admire the force of intellect which he centered on this minute point of theology, his intrepidity. his constancy; but had he not the power to allay the feud which his inexorable spirit tended to keep alive? Was the term Consubstantialism absolutely essential to Christianity? If a somewhat wider creed had been accepted, would not the truth at least as soon and as generally have prevailed? Could not the commanding or persuasive voice of Christianity have awed or charmed the troubled waters to peace?

^{*} Life of Athanasius prefixed to his Works. Tillemont, Vie d'Atha-

But Athanasius, in exile, would consent to no peace which did not prostrate his antagonists before his feet. He had obtained complete command over the minds of the western Emperors. demand for his restoration to his see was not an appeal to the justice, or the fraternal affection of Constantius; it was a question of peace or war.

* Compare Möhler, Athanasius volved in this controversy; and stating one side of the question with consummate ability. It is the panegyric of a dutiful son on him whom he calls the father of church theology. p. 304.

der Grosse und seine zeit (Maintz, 1827), and Newman's Arians. The former is the work of a very powerful Roman Catholic writer, labouring to show that all the vital principles of Christianity were in-Constantius submitted; he received the prelate, on his return, with courtesy, or rather with favour Athanasius entered Alexandria A. D. S38. and distinction. at the head of a triumphal procession; the bishops Restoraof his party resumed their sees; all Egypt re- Athanaturned to its obedience; but the more inflexible Alexan-Syria still waged the war with unallayed activity. dria. A. D. 340. A council was held at Tyre, in which new charges were framed against the Alexandrian prelate: - the usurpation of his see in defiance of his condemnation by a council, (the imperial power seems to have been treated with no great respect), for a prelate, it was asserted, deposed by a council, could only be restored by the same authority; violence and bloodshed during his re-occupation of the see; and malversation of sums of money intended for the poor, but appropriated to his own use. A rival council at Alexandria at once acquitted Athanasius on all these points; asserted his right to the see; appealed to and avouched the universal rejoicings at his restoration; his rigid administration of the funds entrusted to his care.*

A more august assembly of Christian prelates met A. D. 341. in the presence of the Emperor at Antioch. Ninety Antioch. bishops celebrated the consecration of a splendid edifice, called the Church of Gold. The council then entered on the affairs of the church; a creed was framed satisfactory to all, except that it seemed carefully to exclude the term consubstantial or Homoousion. The council ratified the decrees of that of Tyre, with regard to Athanasius. serted on his part that the majority had withdrawn to their dioceses before the introduction of this question, and that a factious minority of forty prelates assumed and abused the authority of the council. They proceeded to nominate a new bishop of Alexandria. Pistus, who had before been appointed to the see, was passed over in silence, probably as too inactive or unambitious for their purpose. Gregory, a native of the wilder region of Cappadocia, but educated under Athanasius himself. in the more polished schools of Alexandria, was invested with this important dignity. Alexandria. peacefully reposing, it is said, under the parental episcopate of Athanasius, was suddenly startled by the appearance of an edict, signed by the imperial præfect, announcing the degradation of Athanasius. and the appointment of Gregory. Scenes of savage conflict ensued; the churches were taken as it were by storm; the priests of the Athanasian party were treated with the utmost indignity; virgins scourged; every atrocity perpetrated by unbridled multitudes. embittered by every shade of religious faction. Alexandrian populace were always ripe for tumult and bloodshed. The Pagans and the Jews mingled in the fray, and seized the opportunity, no doubt, of shewing their impartial animosity to both parties: though the Arians (and, as the original causes of the tumult, not without justice) were loaded with the unpopularity of this odious alliance. arrayed themselves on the side of the soldiery appointed to execute the decree of the præfect; and the Arian bishop is charged, not with much probability, with abandoning the churches to their CHAP. pillage. Athanasius fled; a second time an exile, he took refuge in the West. He appeared again at Athanasius Rome, in the dominions and under the protection flies to Rome. of an orthodox Emperor; for Constans, who, after the death of Constantine, the first protector of Athanasius, had obtained the larger part of the empire belonging to his murdered brother, was no less decided in his support of the Nicene opinions. The two great Western prelates, Hosius of Cordova, eminent from his age and character, and Julius, bishop of Rome, from the dignity of his see, openly espoused Wherever Athanasius resided. — at his cause. Alexandria, in Gaul, in Rome, - in general the devoted clergy, and even the people, adhered with unshaken fidelity to his tenets. Such was the commanding dignity of his character, such his power of profoundly stamping his opinions on the public mind.

^{*} Compare throughout the ecclesiastical historians, Theodoret, Socrates, and Sozomen.

The Arian party, independent of their speculative opinions, cannot be absolved from the unchristian heresy of cruelty and revenge. However darkly coloured, we cannot reject the general testimony to their acts of violence, wherever they attempted to regain their authority. Gregory is Usurpation said to have attempted to compel bishops, priests, monks, and holy virgins, to Christian communion with a prelate thus forced upon them, by every kind of insult and outrage; by scourging and beating with clubs: those were fortunate who escaped with exile*. But if Alexandria was disturbed by the hostile excesses of the Arians, in Constantinople itself, the conflicting religious parties gave rise to the first of those popular tumults which so frequently, in later times, distracted and disgraced the city. Eusebius, formerly Bishop of Nicomedia, the main support of the Arian party, had risen to the episcopacy of the imperial city. His enemies reproached the worldly ambition which deserted an humbler for a more eminent see; but they were not less inclined to contest this important post with the utmost activity. At his death the Athanasian party revived the claims of Paul, whom they asserted to have been canonically elected, and unjustly deposed from the see; the Arians supported Macedonius. The dispute spread from the church into the streets, from the clergy to the populace; blood was shed; the whole city was in arms on one part or the other.

Athanas. Oper., p. 112. 149. 350. 352., and the ecclesiastical historians in loc.

Bloody quarrel at Constantinople.

The Emperor was at Antioch; he commanded Hermogenes, who was appointed to the command of the cavalry in Thrace, to pass through Constantinople, and expel the intruder Paul. Hermogenes, at the head of his soldiery, advanced to force Paul from the church. The populace rose; the soldiers were repelled; the general took refuge in a house, which was instantly set on fire; the mangled body of Hermogenes was dragged through the streets, and at length cast into the sea. Constantius heard this extraordinary intelligence at Antioch. The contempt of the imperial mandate; the murder of an imperial officer in the contested nomination of a bishop, were as yet so new in the annals of the world, as to fill him with equal astonishment and CHAP. indignation. He mounted his horse, though it was winter, and the mountain-passes were dangerous and difficult with snow; he hastened with the utmost speed to Constantinople. But the deep humiliation of the senate and the heads of the people, who prostrated themselves at his feet. averted his resentment: the people were punished by a diminution of the usual largess of corn. was expelled; but, as though some blame adhered to both the conflicting parties, the election of Macedonius was not confirmed, although he was allowed to exercise the episcopal functions. retired, first to Thessalonica, subsequently to the court of Constans.

The remoter consequences of the Athanasian con- Effects of troversy began to develope themselves at this early the Trinitarian conperiod. The Christianity of the East and the troversy in the West, West gradually assumed a divergent and independent character. Though, during a short time, the Arianism of the Ostrogothic conquerors gave a temporary predominance in Italy to that creed, the West in general submitted, in uninquiring acquiescence, to the Trinitarianism of Athanasius. In the East, on the other hand, though the doctrines of > Athanasius eventually obtained the superiority, the controversy gave birth to a long and unexhausted line of subordinate disputes. The East retained its mingled character of Oriental speculativeness and Greek subtlety. It could not abstain from investigating and analysing the divine nature, and the relations of Christ and the Holy Ghost to the Supreme Being. Macedonianism, Nestorianism, Eutychianism, with the fatal disputes relating to the procession of the Holy Ghost, during almost the last hours of the Byzantine empire, may be considered the lineal descendants of this prolific controversy. The opposition of the East and West, of itself tended to increase the authority of that prelate, who assumed his acknowledged station as the head and representative of the Western churches. commanding and popular part taken by the Bishop of Rome, in favour of Athanasius and his doctrines. enabled him to stand forth in undisputed superiority, as at once the chief of the Western episcopate, and the champion of orthodoxy. The age of Hosius. and his residence in a remote province, withdrew the only competitor for this superiority. Athanasius took up his residence at Rome, and, under the protection of the Roman prelate, defied his adversaries to a new contest. Julius summoned the accusers of Athanasius to plead the cause before a council in Rome.* The Eastern prelates altogether disclaimed his jurisdiction, and rejected his pretensions to rejudge the cause of a bishop already condemned by the council of Tyre. The answer of Julius is directed rather to the justification of Athanasius than to the assertion of his own au-

Athanasius at Rome.

Julius, Bishop of Rome.

* Julius is far from asserting any individual authority, or pontifical supremacy. "Why do you alone write?" "Because I represent the opinions of the bishops of Italy." Epist. Julian. Athanas. Op. i. 146.

The ecclesiastical historians, however, in the next century, assert that Rome claimed a right of adjudication. Γνωρίζουσιν ούν τῷ ἐπισκόπῳ 'Ρώμης 'Ιουλίῳ τὰ καθ' ἐαυτούς' ὁ δὲ ἄτε προνόμεα τῆς ἐν 'Ρώμη ἐκκλησίας ἰχούσης. Socr. E. H. ii. 15. Οἰα δὲ τῶν πάντων κηδεμονίας ἀυτῷ προσηκούσης διὰ τὴν αξίαν τοῦ βρόνου. Soz. E. H. iii. 8.

thority. The synod of Rome solemnly acquitted CHAP. . Athanasius, Paul, and all their adherents. Western Emperor joined in the sentiments of his synod dergy. A second council at Milan, in the presence of Constans, confirmed the decree of Rome. Con- A. D. 343. stans proposed to his brother to convoke a general council of both empires. A neutral or border ground was chosen for this decisive conflict. At council of Sardica met one hundred prelates from the West, Sardica. from the East only seventy-five.* Notwithstanding his age and infirmities, Hosius travelled from the extremity of the empire: he at once took the lead in the assembly; and, it is remarkable that the Bishop of Rome, so zealous in the cause of Athanasius, alleged an excuse for his absence. which may warrant the suspicion that he was unwilling to be obscured in this important scene by the superior authority of Hosius. Five of the Western prelates, among whom were Ursacius of Singidunum and Valens of Mursa, embraced the Arian cause: the Arians complained of the defection of two bishops from their body, who betraved their secret counsels to their adversaries. these councils, it appears not to have occurred, that, religion being a matter of faith, the suffrages of the majority could not possibly impose a creed upon a conscientious minority. The question had been too often agitated to expect that it could be placed in a new light.

On matters of fact, the suffrages of the more numerous party might have weight, in the personal condemnation for instance or the acquittal of Athans sius; but as these suffrages could not convince the understanding of those who voted on the other side, the theological decisions must of necessity be rejected, unless the minority would submit likewise to the humiliating confession of insincerity, ignorance, or precipitancy in judgment. The Arian minority did not await this issue; having vainly attempted to impede the progress of the council, by refusing to sanction the presence of persons excommunicated, they seceded to Philippopolis in Thrace. In these two cities sate the rival councils, each asserting itself the genuine representative of Christendom, issuing decrees, and anathematising their adversaries. The Arians are accused of maintaining their influence, even in the East, by acts of great cruelty. In Adrianople, in Alexandria, they enforced submission to their tenets by the scourge, and by heavy penalties.†

⁺ Concilia Labbe, vol. iii. Athanas. contr. Arian. &c. By some accounts there were 100 Western bishops; 73 Eastern.

Rival council at Philippopolis.

The Western council at Milan accepted and ratified the decrees of the council of Sardica, absolving Athanasius of all criminality, and receiving his doctrines as the genuine and exclusive truths On a sudden, affairs took a new Reconcilia- of the Gospel turn; Constantius threw himself, as it were, at the feet of Athanasius, and in three successive letters, entreated him to resume his episcopal tion of Constantius with Athanasius. A. D. 349.

^{*} The Oriental bishops protested against the assumption of supremacy by the Western. Novam legem introducere putaverunt, ut Orientales Episcopi ab Occidentalibus judicarentur. Apud Hilar. Fragm. iii.

[†] The cause of Marcellus of Ancyra, whom the Eusebian party accused of Sabellianism, was throughout connected with that of Athanasius.

throne. The Emperor and the prelate (who had CHAP. delayed at first to obey, either from fear or from pride, the flattering invitation), met at Antioch with mutual expressions of respect and cordiality.* Constantius commanded all the accusations against Athanasius to be erased from the registers of the city. He commended the prelate to the people of Alexandria in terms of courtly flattery, which harshly contrast with his former, as well as with his subsequent, conduct to Athanasius. The Arian bishop, Gregory, was dead, and Athanasius, amid the universal joy, re-entered the city. The bishops crowded from all parts to salute and congratulate the prelate who had thus triumphed over the malice even of imperial enemies. curled up in all the streets; the city was brilliantly illuminated. It was an ovation by the admirers of Athanasius: it is said to have been a Christian ovation; alms were lavished on the poor; every house resounded with prayer and thanksgiving as if it were a church; the triumph of Athanasius was completed by the recantation of Ursacius and Valens, two of his most powerful antagonists.†

This sudden change in the policy of Constantius A. D. 349. is scarcely explicable upon the alleged motives. It is ascribed to the detection of an infamous conspiracy against one of the Western bishops, deputed on a mission to Constantius. The aged prelate

^{*} The Emperor proposed to Athanasius to leave one church to the Arians at Alexandria; Athanasius dexterously eluded the re-quest, by very fairly demanding that one church in Antioch, where the Arians predominated, should be set apart for those of his communion.

⁺ Greg. Nazian. Enc. Athanas. Athanas. Hist. Arian.

OOK

į

was charged with incontinence, but the accusation recoiled on its inventors. A man of infamous character. Onager the wild ass, the chief conductor of the plot, on being detected, avowed himself the agent of Stephen, the Arian bishop of Antioch. Stephen was ignominiously deposed from his see. Yet this single fact would scarcely have at once estranged the mind of Constantius from the interests of the Arian party; his subsequent conduct when, as Emperor of the whole world, he could again dare to display his deep-rooted hostility to Athanasius, induces the suspicion of political reasons. Constantius was about to be embarrassed with the Persian war; at this dangerous crisis, the admonitions of his brother, not unmingled with warlike menace, might enforce the expediency at least of a temporary reconciliation with Athanasius. The political troubles of three years suspended the religious strife. The war of Persia brought some fame to the arms of Constantius; and in the more honourable character, not of the antagonist, but the avenger of his murdered brother, the surviving son of Constantine again united the East and West under The battle of Mursa, if we are his sole dominion. to credit a writer somewhat more recent, was no less fatal to the interests of Athanasius than to the Ursacius and Valens, after arms of Magnentius.* their recantation, had relapsed to Arianism. Valens ath of

rian

ir with ignenp. 351.

* Sulpicius Severus, ii. c. 54.

was the Bishop of Mursa, and in the immediate neighbourhood of that town was fought the decisive pattle. Constantius retired with Valens into the principal church, to assist with his prayers rather than with his directions or personal prowess, the Battle of success of his army. The agony of his mind may be conceived, during the long suspense of a conlict on which the sovereignty of the world depended, and in which the conquerors lost more men than the vanquished.* Valens stood or knelt by his side; on a sudden, when the Emperor was wrought to the highest state of agitation, Valens proclaimed the tidings of his complete victory; intelligence communicated to the prelate by an angel from heaven. Whether Valens had anticipated the event by a bold fiction, or arranged some plan for obtaining rapid information, he appeared from that time to the Emperor as a man especially favoured by Heaven, a prophet, and one of good omen.

But either the fears of the Emperor, or the cau- A. D. 351 tion of the Arian party, delayed yet for three or to 355. four years to execute their revenge on Athanasius. They began with a less illustrious victim. the præfect of the East, received instructions to expel Paul, and to replace Macedonius on the episcopal throne of Constantinople. Philip remembered the fate of Hermogenes; he secured himself in the thermæ of Zeuxippus, and summoned the prelate to his presence. He then communicated his instructions, and frightened or persuaded the Magnentius is said by Zo- mentous occasion. Lib. xiii. t. ii. naras, to have sacrificed a girl, to p. 16, 17. propitiate the gods on this mo-

BOOK 111.

Paul desed from ric of Conmentinople. Macedonius rein aged Paul to consent to be secretly transported in In the morning, Philip a boat over the Bosphorus. appeared in his car, with Macedonius by his side in the pontifical attire; he drove directly to the church, but the soldiers were obliged to hew their way through the dense and resisting crowd to the altar. Macedonius passed over the murdered bodies (three thousand are said to have fallen) to the throne of the Christian prelate. Paul was carried in chains first to Emesa, afterwards to a wild town in the deserts about Mount Taurus. He had disappeared from the sight of his followers, and it is certain that he died in these remote regions. Arians gave out that he died a natural death. was the general belief of the Athanasians that his death was hastened, and even that he had been strangled by the hands of the præfect Philip.*

But before the decisive blow was struck against Athanasius, Constantius endeavoured to subdue the West to the Arian opinions. The Emperor, released from the dangers of war, occupied his triumphant leisure in Christian controversy. seemed determined to establish his sole dominion over the religion as well as the civil obedience of his subjects. The Western bishops firmly opposed Councils of the conqueror of Magnentius. At the councils. first of Arles and afterwards of Milan, they refused to subscribe the condemnation of Athanasius, or to communicate with the Arians. Liberius, the new Bishop of Rome, refused the timid and disingenuous compromise to which his representative at

* Athenas. Oper. i. 322. 348. Socrat. E. H. ii. 26.

Arles, Vincent, deacon of Rome, had agreed; to CHAP. assent to the condemnation of Athanasius, if, at the same time, a decisive anathema should be issued against the tenets of Arius. At Milan, the bishops boldly asserted the independence of the church upon the empire. The Athanasian party forgot, or chose not to remember, that they had unanimously applauded the interference of Constantine, when, after the Nicene council, he drove the Arian bishops into exile. Thus it has always been: the sect or party which has the civil power in its favour is embarrassed with no doubts as to the legality of its interference; when hostile, it resists as an unwarrantable aggression on its own freedom, that which it has not scrupled to employ against its adversaries.

different degrees of magnitude and probability. charges against He was accused of exciting the hostility of Constant Athanasius. stans against his brother. The fact that Constans had threatened to reinstate the exiled prelate by force of arms might give weight to this charge;

The new charges against Athanasius were of very New

He was ac-

Athanasius repelled this but the subsequent reconciliation, the gracious reception of Athanasius by the Emperor, the public edicts in his favour, had, in all justice, cancelled the guilt, if there were really guilt, in this undue cused of treasonable correspondence with the charge with natural indignation. He must be a monster of ingratitude, worthy a thousand deaths, influence over the mind of Constans.

usurper Magnentius.

BOOK 111.

He defied his enemies +- at factor, Constans. production of any letters; he demanded the se verest investigation, the strictest examination, of his own secretaries or those of Magnentius. descent is rapid from these serious charges to the of having officiated in a new and splendid church the Cæsarean, without the permission of the Emperor; and the exercising a paramount and almost monarchical authority over the churches along the whole course of the Nile, even beyond his legitimate jurisdiction. The first was strangely construed into an intentional disrespect to the Em peror, the latter might fairly be attributed to the zeal of Athanasius for the extension of Christianits Some of these points might appear beyond the jurisdiction of an ecclesiastical tribunal; and in the council of Milan there seems to have been an inclination to separate the cause of Athanasius from that of his doctrine. As at Arles, some propose - to abandon the person of Athanasius to the will d the Emperor, if a general condemnation should be passed against the tenets of Arius.

Council of Milan.

Three hundred ecclesiastics formed the cound of Milan. Few of these were from the East. The Bishop of Rome did not appear in person to less the orthodox party. His chief representative was Lucifer of Cagliari, a man of ability, but of violest temper and unguarded language. The Arian faction was headed by Ursacius and Valens, the old adversaries of Athanasius, and by the Emperathimself. Constantius, that the proceedings might take place more immediately under his own superintendence, adjourned the assembly from the church CHAP. to the palace. This unseemly intrusion of a layman in the deliberations of the clergy, unfortunately, was not without precedent. Those who had proudly hailed the entrance of Constantine into the synod of Nice could not, consistently, deprecate the presence of his son at Milan.

The controversy became a personal question be- A. D. 355. tween the Emperor and his refractory subject. The Emperor descended into the arena. mingled in all the fury of the conflict. Constantius was not content with assuming the supreme place as Emperor, or interfering in the especial province of the bishops, the theological question, he laid claim to direct inspiration. He was commissioned by a vision from Heaven to restore peace to the afflicted church. The scheme of doctrine which he proposed was asserted by the Western bishops to be strongly tainted with Arianism. The prudence of the Athanasian party was not equal to their firmness and courage. The obsequious and almost adoring court of the Emperor must have stood aghast at the audacity of the ecclesiastical synod. Their language was that of vehement invective, rather than dignified dissent or calm remonstrance. Constantius, concealed behind a curtain, listened to the debate; he heard his own name coupled with that of heretic, of Antichrist. indignation now knew no bounds. He proclaimed himself the champion of the Arian doctrines, and the accuser of Athanasius. Yet flatteries, persuasions, bribes, menaces, penalties, exiles, were necesBOOK 111. Orders to remove Athanasius awaited in tranquil dignity the bursting storm. He had eluded the imperial summons to appear at Milan, upon the plea that it was ambiguous and obscure. Constantius, either from some lingering remorse, from reluctance to have his new condemnatory ordinances confronted with his favourable, and almost adulatory, testimonies to the innocence of Athanasius, or from fear lest a religious insurrection in Alexandria and Egypt should embarrass the government, and cut off the supplies of corn from the Eastern capital, refused to issue any written order for the deposal and expulsion of Athanasius. He chose, apparently, to retain the power, if convenient, of disowning his emissaries. Two secretaries were despatched with a verbal message, commanding his abdication. Athanasius treated the imperial officers with the utmost courtesy; but respectfully demanded their written instructions. A kind of suspension of hostilities seems to have been agreed upon, till further instructions could be obtained from the Emperor. But in the mean time, Syrianus, the duke of the province, was drawing the troops from all parts of Libya and Egypt to invest and occupy the city. A force of 5000 men was thought necessary to depose a peaceable Christian prelate. The great events in the life of Athanasius, as we have already seen on two occasions, seem, either designedly or of themselves, to take a highly dramatic form. It was midnight, and the archbishop, surrounded by the more devout of his flock, was performing the solemn ceremony, previous to the sacramental service of the next day, in the church of St. Theonas. Suddenly CHAP. the sound of trumpets, the trampling of steeds, the clash of arms, the bursting the bolts of the doors, Tumult in the church interrupted the silent devotions of the assembly. Tumult in the church of Alex-The bishop on his throne, in the depth of the andria. choir, on which fell the dim light of the lamps, beheld the gleaming arms of the soldiery, as they burst into the nave of the church. The archbishop. as the ominous sounds grew louder, commanded the chaunting of the 135th (136th) Psalm. choristers' voices swelled into the solemn strain: -"Oh, give thanks unto the Lord, for he is gracious;" the people took up the burthen, "For his mercy endureth for ever!" The clear, full voices of the congregation rose over the wild tumult, now without, and now within, the church.

A discharge of arrows commenced the conflict; and Athanasius calmly exhorted his people to continue their only defensive measures, their prayers to their Almighty Protector. Syrianus at the same time ordered the soldiers to advance. The cries of the wounded; the groans of those who were trampled down in attempting to force their way out through the soldiery; the shouts of the assailants, mingled in wild and melancholy uproar. But before the soldiers had reached the end of the sanctuary, the pious disobedience of his clergy, and of a body of monks, hurried the archbishop by some secret passage out of the tumult. His escape appeared little less than miraculous to his faithful followers. The riches of the altar, the sacred ornaments of the church, and even the consecrated virgins, were abandoned to the licence of an exasperated soldier. The Catholics in vain drew up an address to the Emperor, appealing to his justice against this soldier, which had been left on the floor of the church, as a reproachful memorial of the violence Constantius confirmed the acts of his officers.*

George of Cappadocia.

The Arians were prepared to replace the depose prelate; their choice fell on another Cappadocia more savage and unprincipled than the former on Constantius commended George of Cappadocia the people of Alexandria, as a prelate above prais the wisest of teachers, the fittest guide to the king His adversaries paint him in th dom of heaven. blackest colours; the son of a fuller, he had bee in turns a parasite, a receiver of taxes, a bankrup Ignorant of letters, savage in manners, he was taken up, while leading a vagabond life, by th Arian prelate of Antioch, and made a priest before he was a Christian. He employed the collection made for the poor in bribing the eunuchs of th palace. But he possessed no doubt, great worldl ability; he was without fear and without remorse He entered Alexandria environed by the troops of His presence let loose the rabid vio Syrianus. lence of party; the Arians exacted ample vengeance for their long period of depression; houses were plundered; monasteries burned; tombs broker open, to search for concealed Athanasians, or fol the prelate himself, who still eluded their pur suit; bishops were insulted; virgins scourged; the soldiery encouraged to break up every meeting, of the Catholics by violence, and even by inhuman tortures. The Duke Sebastian, at the head of 3000 troops, charged a meeting of the Athanasian Christians: no barbarity was too revolting; they are said to have employed instruments of torture to compel them to Christian unity with the Arians; females were scourged with the prickly branches of the palm-tree. The Pagans readily transferred their allegiance, so far as allegiance was demanded; while the savage and ignorant among them rejoiced in the occasion for plunder and cruelty. Others hailed these feuds. and almost anticipated the triumphant restoration of their own religion. Men, they thought, must grow weary and disgusted with a religion productive of so much crime, bloodshed, and misery. Echoing back the language of the Athanasians, they shouted out-"Long life to the Emperor Constantius, and the Arians who have abjured Christianity." And Christianity they seem to have abjured, though not in the sense intended by their adversaries. They had abjured all Christian humanity, holiness, and peace.

^{*} Athanas. Apol. de Fugâ, vol. i. 393, 395.; ad Const. 307, 310. Til p. 334.; ad Monachos, 373, 378. lemont, Vie d'Athanase.

The avarice of George was equal to his cruelty. Exactions were necessary to maintain his interest with the eunuchs, to whom he owed his promotion. The prelate of Alexandria forced himself into the secular affairs of the city. He endeavoured to secure a monopoly of the nitron produced in the lake Mareotis, of the salt-works, and of the papyrus. He became a manufacturer of those painted coffins which were still in use among the Egyptians.

CHAP. V.

Once he was expelled by a sudden insurrection of the people, who surrounded the church, in which he was officiating, and threatened to tear him in pieces. He took refuge in the court, which was then at Sirmium, and a few months beheld him reinstated by the command of his faithful patron the Emperor.* A reinstated tyrant is, in general, the most cruel oppressor; and, unless party violence has blackened the character of George of Cappadocia beyond even its ordinary injustice, the addition of revenge, and the haughty sense of impunity, derived from the imperial protection, to the evil passions already developed in his soul, rendered him a still more intolerable scourge to the devoted city.

Every where the Athanasian bishops were expelled from their sees; they were driven into banishment. The desert was constantly sounding with the hymns of these pious and venerable exiles, as they passed along, loaded with chains, to the remote and savage place of their destination; many of them bearing the scars, and wounds, and mutilations, which had been inflicted upon them by their barbarous persecutors, to enforce their compliance with the Arian doctrines.

Escape and retreat of Atha-nasius.

Athanasius, after many strange adventures; having been concealed in a dry cistern, and in the chamber of a beautiful woman, who attended him with the most officious devotion (his awful character was not even tinged with the breath of suspicion), found refuge at length among the monks of the desert. Egypt is bordered on all sides by wastes

A. D. 356.

* He was at Sirmium, May, 359; restored in October.

of sand, or by barren rocks, broken into caves and CHAP. intricate passes; and all these solitudes were now peopled by the fanatic followers of the hermit Antony. They were all devoted to the opinions, and attached to the person, of Athanasius. austerities of the prelate extorted their admiration: as he had been the great example of a dignified, active, and zealous bishop, so was he now of an ascetic and mortified solitary. The most inured to self-inflicted tortures of mind and body found themselves equalled, if not outdone, in their fasts and austerities by the lofty Patriarch of Alexandria. Among these devoted adherents, his security was complete: their passionate reverence admitted not the fear of treachery. The more active and inquisitive the search of his enemies, he had only to plunge deeper into the inaccessible and inscrutable desert. From this solitude Athanasius himself is supposed sometimes to have issued forth, and, passing the seas, to have traversed even parts of the West, animating his followers, and confirming the faith of his whole widely disseminated party. His own language implies his personal, though secret presence at the councils of Seleucia and Rimini.*

From the desert, unquestionably, came forth many of those writings which must have astonished the Heathen world by their unprecedented bold-For the first time since the foundation of the empire, the government was more or less publicly assailed in addresses, which arraigned its measures as unjust, and as transgressing its legitimate authority, and which did not spare the person of the reigning Emperor. In the West, as well as in the East, Constantius was assailed with equal freedom of invective. The book of Hilary of Poitiers against Constantius, is said not to have been made public till after the death of the Emperor; but it was most likely circulated among the Catholics of the West; and the author exposed himself to the activity of hostile informers, and the indiscretion of fanatical friends. The Emperor is declared to be Antichrist, a tyrant, not in secular, but likewise in religious affairs; the sole object of his reign was to make a free gift to the devil of the whole world, for which Christ had suffered.* Lucifer of Cagliari, ifer of liari.

Athanas. Oper. vol. i. p. 869. Compare Tillemont, Vie d'Athanase.

> * Nihil prorsus aliud egit, quam ut orbem terrarum, pro quo Christus passus est, diabolo con-donaret. Adv. Constant. c. 15. Hilary's highest indignation is excited by the gentle and insidious manner with which he confesses that Constantius endeavoured to compass his unholy end. He would not honour them with the dignity of martyrs, but he used the pre-vailing persuasion of bribes, flatteries, and honours - Non dorsa cædit, sed ventrem palpat; non trudit carcere ad libertatem, sed intra palatium honorat ad servitutem; non latera vexat, sed cor occupat * * non contendit ne vincatur, sed adulatur ut domi-netur. There are several other remarkable passages in this tract. Constantius wished to confine the creed to the language of scripture. This was rejected, as infringing on the authority of the bishops, and the forms of Apostolic preaching. Nolo, inquit, verba quæ non scripta sunt dici. Hoc tanden rogo, qui episcopis jubent et quis apostolicæ prædicationis vetet formam! c. 16. Among the sentences ascribed to the Arians, which so much shocked the Western bishops, there is one which is evidently the argument of a strong anti-materialist asserting the sole existence of the Father, and that the terms of son and generation, &c., are not to be received in a literal sense. Erat Deus quod est. Pater non erat, quia neque ei filius; nam si filius, necesse est ut et fæmina sit, &c. One phrase has a singularly Oriental, I would say, Indian cast. How much soever the Son expands himself towards the knowledge of the Father, so much the Father super-expands himself. lest he should be known by the Son. Quantum enim Filius se extendit cognoscere Patrem, tantum Pater superextendit se, ne cogni-tus Filio sit. c. 13. The parties, at least in the West, were speak-hose violent temper afterwards distracted the CHAP. restern church with a schism, is now therefore reidiated by the common consent of all parties. But thanasius speaks in ardent admiration of the inmperate writings of this passionate man, and once escribes him as inflamed by the spirit of God. ucifer, in his banishment, sent five books full of e most virulent invective to the Emperor. Conantius—it was the brighter side of his religious chacter - received these addresses with almost conmptuous equanimity. He sent a message to Lucir, to demand if he was the author of these works. ucifer replied not merely by an intrepid acknowdgment of his former writings, but by a sixth, in ill more unrestrained and exaggerated language. onstantius was satisfied with banishing him to the hebaid. Athanasius himself, who in his public ndication addressed to Constantius, maintained ne highest respect for the imperial dignity, in is Epistle to the Solitaries gives free vent and spression to his vehement and contemptuous sen-His recluse friends are cautioned, indeed, ot to disclose the dangerous document, in which ne tyrants of the Old Testament, Pharaoh, Ahab, nitionem sui docuit potius quam exegit. * * Deus universitatis est Dominus; non requirit coactam confessionem. Nostra potius non suâ causâ venerandus est * * simplicitate quærendus est, confessione discendus est, charitate amandus est, timore venerandus est, voluntatis probitate retinendus

g two totally distinct languages. would be unjust to Hilary not acknowledge the beautiful and aristian sentiments scattered rough his two former addresses Constantius, which are firm, but spectful; and if rigidly, yet sinrely, dogmatic. His plea for tolerion, if not very consistently est, voluntatis pro sintained, is expressed with great est. Lib. i. c. 6. rce and simplicity. Deus cog-

Belshazzar, are contrasted, to his disadvantage, with the base, the cruel, the hypocritical Constantius. It is curious to observe this new element of freedom, however at present working in a concealed, irregular, and, perhaps, still-guarded manner, mingling itself up with, and partially up-heaving, the general prostration of the human mind. The Christian, or, in some respects, it might be more justly said, the hierarchical principle, was entering into the constitution of human society, as an antagonist power to that of the civil sovereign. tian community was no longer a separate republic, governed within by its own laws, yet submitting, in all but its religious observances, to the general By the establishment of Christianity ordinances. under Constantine, and the gradual reunion of two sections of mankind into one civil society, those two powers, that of the church and the state, became co-ordinate authorities, which, if any difference should arise between the heads of the respective supremacies, - if the Emperor and the dominant party in Christendom should take opposite sides, led to inevitable collision. This crisis had already arrived. An Arian emperor was virtually excluded from a community in which the Athanasian doctrines prevailed. The son of Constantine belonged to an excommunicated class, to whom the dominant Thus these party refused the name of Christians. two despotisms, both founded on opinion (for obedience to the imperial authority was rooted in the universal sentiment), instead of gently counteracting and mitigating each other, came at once into direct and angry conflict. The Emperor might with justice begin to suspect that, instead of securing a peaceful and submissive ally, he had raised up a rival or a master; for the son of Constantine was thus in his turn disdainfully ejected from the society which his father had incorporated with the empire. It may be doubted how far the violences and barbarities ascribed by the Catholics to their Arian foes may be attributed to the indignation of the civil power at this new and determined resistance. Though Constantius might himself feel or affect a compassionate disdain at these unusual attacks on his person and dignity, the general feeling of the Heathen population, and many of the local governors, might resist this contumacious contempt of the supreme authority. It is difficult otherwise to account for the general tumult excited by these disputes in Alexandria, in Constantinople, and in Rome, where at least a very considerable part of the population had no concern in the religious quarrel. The old animosity against Christianity would array itself under the banners of one of the conflicting parties, or take up the cause of the insulted sovereignty of The Athanasian party constantly the Emperor. assert that the Arians courted, or at least did not decline, the invidious alliance of the Pagans.

But in truth, in the horrible cruelties perpetrated Mutual acduring these unhappy divisions, it was the same of cruelty. savage ferocity of manners, which half a century before had raged against the Christian church, which now apparently raged in its cause.* The abstruse tenets of the Christian theology became the illunderstood, perhaps unintelligible, watchwords of violent and disorderly men. The rabble of Alexandria and other cities availed themselves of the commotion to give loose to their suppressed passion for the excitement of plunder and bloodshed. How far the doctrines of Christianity had worked down into the populace of the great cities cannot be ascertained, or even conjectured; its spirit had not in the least mitigated their ferocity and inhumanity. If Christianity is accused as the immediate exciting cause of these disastrous scenes, the predisposing principle was in that uncivilised nature of man, which not merely was unallayed by the gentle and humanising tenets of the Gospel, but, as it has perpetually done, pressed the Gospel itself, as it were, into its own unhallowed service.

^{*} See the depositions of the the violence which they had thembishops assembled at Sardica, of selves endured at the hands of the

Arians. Alii autem gladiorum signa, plagas et cicatrices ostendebant. Alii se fame ab ipsis excruciatos querebantur. Et hæc non ignobiles testificabantur viri, sed de ecclesiis omnibus electi propter quas huc convenerunt, res gestas edocebant, milites armatos, populos cum fustibus, judicum minas, falsarum literarum suppositiones.  Ad hæc virginum nudationes, incendia ecclesiarum, carceres adversos ministros Dei. Hilar. Fragm. Op. Hist. ii. c. 4.

The Arians retort the same accusations of violence, cruelty, and persecution, against Athanasius. They say—Per vim, per cædem, per bellum, Alexandrinorum ecclesias deprædatus;—and this, per pugnas et cædes gentilium. Decretum Synodi Orientalium Episcoporum apud Sardicam, apud S. Hilarium.

Immensa autem confluxerat ad Sardicam multitudo sceleratorum omnium et perditorum, adventartium de Constantinopoli, de Alexandria, qui rei homicidiorum, rei sanguinis, rei cædis, rei latrociniorum, rei prædarum, rei spoliorum, nefandorumque omnium sacrilegiorum et criminum rei; qui altaria confregerunt, ecclesias incenderunt, domosque privatorum compilaverunt; profanatores mysteriorum, proditoresque sacramentorum Christi; qui impiam sceleratamque hæreticorum doctrinam contra ecclesiæ fidem asserentes. sapientissimos presbyteros Dei, diacones, sacerdotes, atrociter demactaverunt. Ibid. 19. And this protest, full of these tremendous charges, was signed by the eighty seceding Eastern bishops.

The severe exclusiveness of dogmatic theology attained its height in this controversy. Hitherto, the Catholic and heretical doctrines had receded from each other at the first outset, as it were, and drawn off to opposite and irreconcileable extremes. The heretics had wandered away into the boundless regions of speculation; they had differed on some of the most important elementary principles of belief; they had rarely admitted any common basis for argument. Here the contending parties set out from nearly the same principles, admitted the same authority, and seemed, whatever their secret bias or inclination, to differ only on the import of one word. Their opinions, like parallel lines in mathematics, seemed to be constantly approximating, yet found it impossible to unite. The Athanasians taunted the Arians with the infinite variations in their belief: Athanasius recounts no less than eleven creeds. But the Arians might have pleaded their anxiety to reconcile themselves to the church, their earnest solicitude to make every advance towards a reunion, provided they might be excused the adoption of the one obnoxious word, the Homoousion, or Consubstantialism. But the inflexible orthodoxy of Athanasius will admit no compromise; nothing less than complete unity, not merely of expression, but of mental conception, will satisfy the rigour of the ecclesiastical dictator, who will permit no single letter, and, as far as he can detect it, no shadow of thought, to depart from his peremptory creed. He denounces his adversaries, for the least deviation, as enemies of Christ; he presses them with consequences drawn from their opinions; and, instead of spreading wide the gates of Christianity, he seems to unbar them with jealous reluctance, and to admit no one without the most cool and inquisitorial scrutiny into the most secret arcans of his belief.

Athanasius as a writer.

In the writings of Athanasius is embodied the perfection of polemic divinity. His style, indeed, has no splendour, no softness, nothing to kindle the imagination, or melt the heart. Acute, even to subtlety, he is too earnest to degenerate into scholastic triffing. It is stern logic, addressed to the reason of those who admitted the authority of Christianity. There is no dispassionate examination, no candid philosophic inquiry, no calm statement of his adversaries' case, no liberal acknowledgment of the infinite difficulties of the subject, scarcely any consciousness of the total insufficiency of human language to trace the question to its depths; all is peremptory, dictatorial, imperious; the severe conviction of the truth of his own opinions, and the inference that none but culpable motives, either of pride, or strife, or ignorance, can blind his adversa ries to their cogent and irrefragable certainty. Athanasius walks on the narrow and perilous edge of orthodoxy with a firmness and confidence which it is impossible not to admire. It cannot be doubted that he was deeply, intimately, persuaded that the vital power and energy, the truth, the consolatory force of Christianity, entirely depended on the unquestionable elevation of the Saviour to the most absolute equality with the Parent Godhead.

ingenuity with which he follows out his own views of the consequences of their errors is wonderfully acute; but the thought constantly occurs, whether a milder and more conciliating tone would not have healed the wounds of afflicted Christianity; whether his lofty spirit is not conscious that his native element is that of strife rather than of peace.*

Though nothing can contrast more strongly with the expansive and liberal spirit of primitive Christianity than the repulsive tone of this exclusive theology, yet this remarkable phasis of Christianity seems to have been necessary, and not without advantage to the permanence of the religion. the civilisation of mankind, Christianity was about to pass through the ordeal of those dark ages which followed the irruption of the barbarians. During this period, Christianity was to subsist as the conservative principle of social order and the sacred charities of life, the sole, if not always faithful, guardian of ancient knowledge, of letters, and of arts. But in order to preserve its own existence. it assumed, of necessity, another form. have a splendid and imposing ritual, to command the barbarous minds of its new proselytes, and one which might be performed by an illiterate priesthood; for the mass of the priesthood could not but be involved in the general darkness of the It must likewise have brief and definite formularies of doctrine. As the original languages,

CHAP. V.

At a later period, Athanasius seems to have been less rigidly exclusive against the Semi-Arians. Compare Möhler, ii. p. 230.

BOOK

Necessity of creeds during the succeeding centuries. and even the Latin, fell into disuse, and before the modern languages of Europe were sufficiently formed to admit of translations, the sacred writings receded from general use; they became the depositaries of Christian doctrine, totally inaccessible to the laity, and almost as much so to the lower Creeds therefore became of essential importance to compress the leading points of Christian doctrine into a small compass. And as the barbarous and ignorant mind cannot endure the vague and the indefinite, so it was essential that the main points of doctrine should be fixed and cast into plain and emphatic propositions. theological language was firmly established before the violent breaking up of society; and no more was required of the barbarian convert than to accept with uninquiring submission the established formulary of the faith, and gaze in awe-struck veneration at the solemn ceremonial.

Influence of Athanasian controversy on the growth of the papal power.

The Athanasian controversy powerfully contributed to establish the supremacy of the Roman pontiff. It became almost a contest between Eastern and Western Christendom; at least the West was neither divided like the East, nor submitted with the same comparatively willing obedience, to the domination of Arianism under the imperial authority. It was necessary that some one great prelate should take the lead in this internecine strife. The only Western bishop whom his character would designate as this leader was Hosius, the Bishop of Cordova. But age had now disqualified this good man, whose moderation, abilities, and probably important services to Christianity in the conversion of Constantine, had recommended him to the common acceptance of the Christian world, as president of the council of Nice. Where this acknowledged superiority of character and talent was wanting, the dignity of the see would command the general respect; and what see could compete. at least, in the West, with Rome? Antioch, Alexandria, or Constantinople, could alone rival, in pretensions to Christian supremacy, the old metropolis of the empire: and those sees were either fiercely contested, or occupied by Arian prelates. Athanasius himself, by his residence, at two separate periods, at Rome, submitted as it were his cause to the Roman pontiff. Rome became the centre of the ecclesiastical affairs of the West; and, since the Trinitarian opinions eventually triumphed through the whole of Christendom, the firmness and resolution with which the Roman pontiffs, notwithstanding the temporary fall of Liberius, adhered to the orthodox faith; their uncompromising attachment to Athanasius, who, by degrees, was sanctified and canonised in the memory of Christendom, might be one groundwork for that belief in their infallibility, which, however it would have been repudiated by Cyprian, and never completely prevailed in the East, became throughout the West the inalienable spiritual heirloom of the Roman pontiffs, Christian history will hereafter show how powerfully this monarchical principle, if not established, yet greatly strengthened, by these consequences of the Athanasian controversy, tended to consolidate and

CHAP. V.

BOOK III. luperiority

f Arian-

m.

so to maintain, in still expanding influence, the Christianity of Europe.*

This conflict continued with unabated vigou till the close of the reign of Constantius. Arianism gradually assumed the ascendant, through the vio lence and the arts of the Emperor; all the mor distinguished of the orthodox bishops were in exile or, at least, in disgrace. Though the personal in fluence of Athanasius was still felt throughou Christendom, his obscure place of concealment wa probably unknown to the greater part of his own adherents. The aged Hosius had died in his apos tasy. Hilary of Poictiers, the Bishop of Milan and the violent Lucifer of Cagliari, were in exile and, though Constantius had consented to the re turn of Liberius to his see, he had returned with the disgrace of having consented to sign the new formulary framed at Sirmium, where the term Consubstantial, if not rejected, was, at least, sup pressed. Yet the popularity of Liberius was un diminished, and the whole city indignantly rejected the insidious proposition of Constantius, that Libe

Sardica admits the superior dignity of the successors of St. Peter. Hoc enim optimum et valde congruentissimum esse videbitur, si ad caput, id est, ad Petri Apostoli sedem, de singulis quibusque provinciis Domini re-ferant sacerdotes. Epist. Syn. Sard. apud Hilarium, Fragm. Oper. Hist. ii. c. 9. It was disclaimed with equal distinctness by the seceding Arians. Novam legem introducere putaverunt, ut Orientales Episcopi ab Occidenta-

* The orthodox Synod of libus judicarentur. Fragm. ii ardica admits the superior dig- c. 12. In a subsequent clause they condemn Julius, Bishop c Rome, by name. It is difficult t calculate the effect which woul commonly be produced on men' minds by their involving in one com mon cause the two tenets, which in fact, bore no relation to eac other,—the orthodox belief in th Trinity, and the supremacy of th Bishop of Rome. Sozomen, in 11. 13. Theodoret, ii. 17. Phi lostorgius, iv. 3.

rius and his rival Felix should rule the see with CHAP. conjoint authority. The parties had already come, to blows, and even to bloodshed, when Felix, who it was admitted, had never swerved from the creed of Nice, and whose sole offence was entering into communion with the Arians, either from moderation, or conscious of the inferiority of his party, withdrew to a neighbouring city, where he soon closed his days, and relieved the Christians of Rome from the apprehension of a rival pontiff. The unbending resistance of the Athanasians was no doubt confirmed, not merely by the variations in the Arian creed, but by the new opinions which they considered its legitimate offspring, and which appeared to justify their worst apprehensions of its inevitable consequences. Actius formed a new Heresy of sect, which not merely denied the consubstantiality. but the similitude of the Son to the Father. was not only not of the same, but of a totally different, nature. Actius, according to the account of his adversaries, was a bold and unprincipled adventurer*; and the career of a person of this class is exemplified in his life. The son of a soldier, at one time condemned to death and to the confiscation of his property, Aetius became a humble artisan, first as • Socrates, ii. 35. Sozomen, ii. 15., iv. 12. Philostorg. iii. 15. 17. Suidas, voc. Acrusy. Epiphan. Heres. 76. Gregor. Nyss. contra Eurosa.

The most curious part in the History of Actius is his attachment to the Aristotelian philo-sophy. With him appears to have begun the long strife between Aristotelianism and Platonism in the church. Actius, to prove his unimaginative doctrines, employed the severe and prosaic categories of Aristotle, repudiating the prevailing Platonic mode of argument used by Origen and Clement of Alexandria. Socrates, ii. c. 35.

a worker in copper, afterwards in gold. His dishonest practices obliged him to give up the trade, but not before he had acquired some property. tached himself to Paulinus, Bishop of Antioch; was expelled from the city by his successor; studied grammar at Anazarba; was encouraged by the Arian bishop of that see, named Athanasius; re turned to Antioch; was ordained deaton; and again expelled the city. Discomfited in a public disput ation with a Gnostic, he retired to Alexandria where, being exercised in the art of rhetoric, h revenged himself on a Manichean, who died of shame. He then became a public itinerant teache practising, at the same time, his lucrative art of The Arians rejected Aetius with r goldsmith. less earnest indignation than the orthodox, but the could not escape being implicated, as it were, i his unpopularity; and the odious Anomeans, thos who denied the similitude of the Son to the Fathe brought new discredit even on the more temperat partisans of the Arian creed. Another heresiarch. a higher rank, still further brought disrepute c the Arian party. Macedonius, the Bishop of Con stantinople, to the Arian tenet of the inequality the Son to the Father, added the total denial of th divinity of the Holy Ghost.

Of Macedonius.

Council still followed council. Though we man not concur with the Arian bishops in ascribing their adversaries the whole blame of this perpetutumult and confusion in the Christian world, cause by these incessant assemblages of the clergy, their must have been much melancholy truth in their state.

ment. "The East and the West are in a perpetual CHAP. state of restlessness and disturbance. Deserting our spiritual charges; abandoning the people of God; neglecting the preaching of the Gospel; we are hurried about from place to place, sometimes to great distances, some of us infirm with age, with feeble constitutions or ill health, and are sometimes obliged to leave our sick brethren on the road. whole administration of the empire, of the Empeor himself, the tribunes, and the commanders, at this fearful crisis of the state, are solely occupied with the lives and the condition of the bishops. The people are by no means unconcerned. whole brotherhood watches in anxious suspense the event of these troubles; the establishment of posthorses is worn out by our journeyings; and all on account of a few wretches, who, if they had the least remaining sense of religion, would say with the Prophet Jonah, 'Take us up and cast us into the sea; so shall the sea be calm unto you; for we know that it is on our account that this great tempest is upon you." *

The synod at Sirmium had no effect in reconciling the differences, or affirming the superiority of either party. A double council was appointed, of the Eastern prelates at Seleucia, of the Western at Rimini. The Arianism of the Emperor himself had by this time degenerated still farther from the creed of Nice. Eudoxus, who had espoused the Anomean doctrines of Aetius, ruled his untractable but passive mind. The council of Rimini con- Council of sisted of at least 400 bishops, of whom not above eighty were Arians. Their resolutions were firm and peremptory. They repudiated the Arian doctrines; they expressed their rigid adherence to the formulary of Nice. Ten bishops, however, of each party, were deputed to communicate their decrees to Constantius. The ten Arians were received with the utmost respect, their rivals with every kind of slight and neglect. Insensibly they were admitted to more intimate intercourse; the flatteries, perhaps the bribes, of the Emperor prevailed; they returned, having signed a formulary directly opposed to their instructions. Their reception at first was unpromising; but by degrees the council, from which its firmest and most resolute members had gradually departed, and in which many poor and aged bishops still retained their seat, wearied, perplexed, worn out by the expense and discomfort of a long residence in a foreign city, consented to sign a creed in which the contested word, the homoousion, was carefully suppressed.* Arianism was thus deliberately adopted by a council, of which the authority was undis-The world, says Jerome, groaned to find itself Arian. But, on their return to their dioceses, the indignant prelates every where protested against the fraud and violence which had been practised

[#] Hilar. Oper. Hist. Fragm. xi. c. 25.

^{*} It is curious enough, that the Latin language did not furnish terms to express this fine distinction. Some Western prelates, many of whom probably did not understand a word of Greek, proposed, against them. New persecutions followed: Gau- CHAP. dentius, Bishop of Rimini, lost his life.

[&]quot;jam usiæ et homoousii nomina recedant quæ in divinis Scripturis de Deo, et Dei Filio, non inveniuntur scripta." Apud Hilarium, Oper. Hist. Fragm. ix.

The triumph of Arianism was far easier among the hundred and sixty bishops assembled at Seleucia. But it was more fatal to their cause: the Arians, and Semi-Arians, and Anomeans, mingled in tumultuous strife, and hurled mutual anathemas against each other. The new council met at Constantinople. By some strange political or religious vicissitude, the party of the Anomeans triumphed, while Actius, its author, was sent into banishment.* Macedonius was deposed; Eudoxus of Antioch was translated to the imperial see; and the solemn dedication of the church of St. Sophia was celebrated by a prelate who denied the similitude of nature between the Father and the Son. whole Christian world was in confusion; these fatal feuds penetrated almost as far as the Gospel itself had reached. The Emperor, whose alternately partial vehemence and subtlety had inflamed rather than allayed the tumult, found his authority set at nought; a deep, stern, and ineradicable resistance opposed the imperial decrees. A large portion of the empire proclaimed aloud that there were limits to the imperial despotism; that there was a higher allegiance, which superseded that due to the

to have been the heroes of the historian Philostorgius, fragments of whose history have been preserved by the pious hostility of Photius. This diminishes our regret for the loss of the original work, which ine Arian history. Philostorgius roc. Lib. i. 2, 3.

* Actius and Eunomius seem seems to object to the anti-materialist view of the Deity maintained by the Semi-Arian Eusebius, and, according to him, by Arius himself. He reproaches Eusebius with asserting the Deity to be incomprehensible and inconwould be less curious than a genu- ceivable: ἄγνωστος καὶ ἀκατάληπ-

BOOK civil authority; that in affairs of religion they would not submit to the appointment of superiors who did not profess their views of Christian orthodoxy. The Emperor himself, by mingling with almost fanatical passion and zeal in these controversies at once lowered himself to the level of his subjects, and justified the importance which they attached to these questions. If Constantius had firmly, calmly, and consistently, enforced mutual toleration, - if he had set the example of Christian modertion and temper; if he had set his face solely against the stern refusal of Athanasius and his party to admit the Arians into communion, -he might, perhaps, have retained some influence over the contending parties. But he was not content without enforcing the dominance of the Arian party; he dignified Athanasius with the hatred of a personal enemy, almost of a rival; and his subjects, by his own apparent admission that these were questions of spiritual life and death, were compelled to postpone his decrees to those of God; to obey their bishops, who held the keys of heaven and hell, rather than Cæsar, who could only afflict them with civil disabilities, or penalties in this life.

^{*} Hilary quotes the sentence of Emperor's assuming the cogni-St. Paul. Ubi fides est, ibi et sance over religious questions libertas est; in allusion to the Oper. Hist. Fragm. i. c. 5.

CHAP. VI.

CHAPTER VI.

JULIAN.

Amidst all this intestine strife within the pale of Christianity, and this conflict between the civil and religious authorities, concerning their respective limits, Paganism made a desperate effort to regain its lost supremacy. Julian has, perhaps, been somewhat unfairly branded with the ill-sounding name of Apostate. His Christianity was but the compulsory obedience of youth to the distasteful lessons of education, enforced by the hateful authority of a tyrannical relative. As early as the maturity of his reason, — at least as soon as he dared to reveal his secret sentiments.—he avowed his preference for the ancient Paganism.

The most astonishing part of Julian's history is the development and partial fulfilment of all his vast designs during a reign of less than two His own age wondered at the rapidity with which the young Emperor accomplished his military, civil, and religious schemes.* During his separate and subordinate command as multa tam brevi tempore. Et rectè.

* Dicet aliquis: quomodo tam tione dierum et mensium, sed

Sed Imperator noster addit ad tempus quod otio suo detrahit.

* * Itaque grandævum jam imperium videbitur his, qui non ra-

BOOK Cæsar, his time was fully occupied with his splendid campaigns upon the Rhine.* was the vindicator of the old majesty of the empire; he threw back with a bold and success-of Julian. A. D. 361-363.

ful effort the inroad of barbarism, which already threatened to overwhelm the Roman civilisation of During the two unfinished years of his Short reign sole government, Julian had reunited the whole Roman empire under his single sceptre: he had reformed the army, the court, the tribunals of justice; he had promulgated many useful laws, which maintained their place in the jurisprudence of the empire; he had established peace on all the frontiers; he had organised a large and welldisciplined force to chastise the Persians for their aggressions on the eastern border, and by a formidable diversion within their own territories, to secure the Euphratic provinces against the most dangerous rival of the Roman power. During all these engrossing cares of empire, he devoted himself with the zeal and activity of a mere philosopher and man of letters to those more tranquil pursuits. The conqueror of the Franks and the antagonist of Sapor delivered lectures in the schools, and published works, which, whatever may be thought of their depth and truth, display no mean powers of composition: as a writer, Julian will compete with most of his age. Besides all this, his vast and rest less spirit contemplated, and had already commenced, nothing less than a total change in the religion of the empire; not merely the restoration of Paganism to the legal supremacy which it CHAP. possessed before the reign of Constantine, and the degradation of Christianity into a private sect; but the actual extirpation of the new religion from the minds of men by the reviving energies of a philosophic, and at the same time profoundly religious, Paganism.

[•] Six years, from 355 to 361.

The genius of ancient Rome and of ancient Character Greece might appear to revive in amicable union of Julian. in the soul of Julian. The unmeasured military ambition, which turned the defensive into a war of aggression on all the imperilled frontiers; the broad and vigorous legislation; the unity of administration; the severer tone of manners, which belonged to the better days of Rome; the fine cultivation; the perspicuous philosophy; the lofty conceptions of moral greatness and purity, which distinguished If the former (the Roman mithe old Athenian. litary enterprise), met eventually with the fate of Crassus or of Varus, rather than the glorious successes of Germanicus or Trajan, the times were more in fault than the general: if the latter (the Grecian elevation and elegance of mind) more resembled at times the affectation of the Sophist, and the coarseness of the Cynic, than the lofty views and exquisite harmony of Plato, or the practical wisdom of Socrates, the effete and exhausted state of Grecian letters and philosophy must likewise be taken into the account.

In the uncompleted two years of his sole empire*,

One year, eight months, and twenty-three days. La Bleterie, Vie de Julien, p. 491.

Julian had advanced so far in the restoration of the internal vigour and unity of administration, that it is doubtful how much further, but for the fatal Persian campaign, he might have fulfilled the visions of his noble ambition. He might have averted, at least for a time, the terrible calamities which burst upon the Roman world during the reign of Valen-But difficult and desperate as tinian and Valens. the enterprise might appear, the re-organisation of a decaying empire was less impracticable than the restoration of an extinguishing religion. gion may awaken from indifference, and resume its dominion over the minds of men; but not, if supplanted by a new form of faith, which has identified itself with the opinions and sentiments of the general mind. It can never dethrone a successful invader, who has been recognised as sovereign. And Christianity (could the clear and sagacious mind of Julian be blind to this essential difference?) had occupied the whole soul of man with a fulness and confidence which belonged, and could belong, to no former religion. It had intimately blended together the highest truths of philosophy with the purest morality; the loftiest speculation with the most practical spirit. The vague theory of another life, timidly and dimly announced by the later Paganism, could ill compete with the deep and intense conviction, now rooted in the hearts of a large part of mankind by Christianity; the source in some of harrowing fears, in others of the noblest hopes

Julian united in his own mind, and attempted to work into his new religion, the two incongruous characters of a zealot for the older superstitions, and for the more modern philosophy of Greece. He had fused together, in that which appeared to Religion of him an harmonious system, Homer and Plato. He thought that the whole ritual of sacrifice would combine with that allegoric interpretation of the ancient mythology, which undeified the greater part of the Heathen Pantheon. All that Paganism had borrowed from Christianity, it had rendered comparatively cold and powerless. The one Supreme Deity was a name and an abstract conception, a metaphysical being. The visible representative of the Deity, the Sun, which was in general an essential part of the new system, was, after all, foreign and Oriental; it belonged to the genuine mythology neither of Greece nor Rome. Theurgy, or awful and sublime communion of the mind with the spiritual world, was either too fine and fanciful for the vulgar belief, or associated, in the dim confusion of the popular conception, with that magic, against which the laws of Rome had protested with such stern solemnity; and which, therefore, however eagerly pursued, and reverenced with involuntary awe, was always associated with impressions of its unlawfulness and guilt. tianity, on the other hand, had completely incorporated with itself all that it had admitted from Paganism, or which, if we may so speak, constituted the Pagan part of Christianity. The Heathen Theurgy, even in its purest form, its dreamy intercourse with the intermediate race of dæmons, was poor and ineffective, compared with the diabolic and angelic agency, which became more and more mingled up with Christianity. Where these subordinate dæmons were considered by the more philosophic Pagan to have been the older deities of the popular faith, it was rather a degradation of the ancient worship; where this was not the case, this fine perception of the spiritual world was the secret of the initiate few, rather than the all-pervading superstition of the many. The Christian dæmonology, on the other hand, which began to be heightened and multiplied by the fantastic imagination of the monks, brooding in their solitudes, seemed at least to grow naturally out of the religious system. The gradual darkening into superstition was altother imperceptible, and harmonised entirely with the general feelings of the time. Christianity was a living plant, which imparted its vitality to the foreign suckers grafted upon it; the dead and sapless trunk of Paganism withered even the living boughs which were blended with it, by its own inevitable decay.

Unfavourable state of Christianity. On the other hand, Christianity at no period could appear in a less amiable and attractive light to a mind preindisposed to its reception. It was in a state of universal fierce and implacable discord: the chief cities of the empire had run with blood shed in religious quarrels. The sole object of the conflicting parties seemed to be to confine to themselves the temporal and spiritual blessings of the faith; to exclude as many as they might from that eternalife, and to anathematise to that eternal death, which were revealed by the Gospel, and placed, according to the general belief, under the special authority of the clergy. Society seemed to be split up into irreconcileable parties; to the animosities of Pagan and Christian, were now added those of Christian and Christian. Christianity had passed through its earlier period of noble moral enthusiasm; of the energy with which it addressed its first proclamation of its doctrines to man; of the dignity with which it stood aloof from the intrigues and vices of the world: and of its admirable constancy under persecution. It had not fully attained its second state as a religion generally established in the minds of men, by a dominant hierarchy of unquestioned authority. Its great truths had no longer the striking charm of novelty; nor were they yet universally and profoundly implanted in the general mind by hereditary transmission, or early education, and ratified by the unquestioning sanction of ages.

The early education of Julian had been, it might almost appear, studiously and skilfully conducted, so as to show the brighter side of Paganism, the darker of Christianity. His infant years had been clouded by the murder of his father. How far his mind might retain any impression of this awful event, or remembrance of the place of his refuge, the Christian church, or the saviour of his life, the virtuous Bishop of Arethusa, it is of course impossible to conjecture. But his first instructor was a man who, born a Scythian, and educated in Greece*, united the severe morality of his ruder ancestors with the elegance of Grecian accomplishments. He enforced upon his young pupil the strictest modesty, contempt for the licentious or frivolous pleasures of youth, the theatre and the bath. At the same time, while he delighted his mind with the poetry of Homer, his graver studies were the Greek and Latin languages, the elements of the philosophy of Greece, and music, that original and attractive element of Grecian education.* At the age of about fourteen or fifteen, Julian was shut up, with his brother Gallus, in Macellæ, a fortress in Asia Minor, and committed in this sort of honourable prison to the rigid superintendence of ecclesiastics. By his Christian instructors, the young and ardent Julian was bound down to a course of the strictest observances; the midnight vigil, the fast, the long and weary prayer, and visits to the tombs of martyrs, rather than a wise and rational initiation in the genuine principles of the Gospel; or a judicious familiarity with the originality, the beauty, and the depth of the Christian morals and Christian religion. He was taught the virtue of implicit submission to his ecclesiastical superiors; the munificence of conferring gifts upon the churches; with his brother Gallus he was permitted, or rather incited, to build a chapel over the tomb of St. Mammas.† For six years,

[•] His name was Mardonius. Socrat. E. H. iii. 1. Amm. Marc. Julian. ad Athen. et Misopogon. xxii 12.

Education of Julian.

* See the high character of this man in the Misopogon, p. 351.

tianity. A prophetic miracle foreboded his future course. While this church rose expeditiously under the labour of Gallus, the obstinate stones would not obey that of Julian; an invisible hand disturbed the foundations, and he bitterly asserts, that he was deprived of every kind of useful instruction.* Julian and his brother, it is even said, were ordained readers, and officiated in public in that character. But the passages of the sacred writings, with which he might thus have become acquainted, were imposed as lessons; and in the mind of Julian, Christianity, thus taught and enforced, was inseparably connected with the irksome and distasteful feelings of confinement and degradation. No youths of his own rank, or of ingenuous birth, were permitted to visit his prison; he was reduced, as he indignantly declares, to the debasing society of slaves.

[†] Julian is said even thus early to have betrayed his secret inclinations; in his declamations he took delight in defending the cause of Paganism against Chris-

At the age of twenty, Julian was permitted to reside in Constantinople, afterwards at Nicomedia. The jealousy of Constantius was excited by the popular demeanour, sober manners, and the reputation for talents, which directed all eyes towards his youthful nephew. He dismissed him to the more dangerous and fatal residence in Nicomedia, in the neighbourhood of the most celebrated and most attractive of the Pagan party. The most faithful adherents of Paganism were that class with which the tastes and inclinations of Julian brought him into close intimacy; the sophists, the men of letters, the rhetoricians, the poets, the philosophers. He was forbidden, indeed, perhaps by the jealousy of his appointed instructor Ecebolus, who at this time conformed to the religion of the court, to hear the threw down all his work. Gregory Nazianzen declares that he had heard this from eye-witnesses; Sozomen, from those who had heard it from eye-witnesses. Gregor. Or. iii. p. 59. 61. Sozomen, v. 2.

Πάντος μαθήματος σπουδαίου.

Intercourse with the philosophers.

dangerous lectures of Libanius, equally celebrated for his eloquence and his ardent attachment to the old religion. But Julian obtained his writings, which he devoured with all the delight of a stolen enjoyment.* He formed an intimate acquaintance with the heads of the philosophic school, with Ædesius, his pupils Eusebius and Chrysanthius, and at last with the famous Maximus. These men are accused of practising the most subtle and insidious arts upon the character of their ardent and youthful votary. His grave and meditative mind imbibed with eager delight the solemn mysticism of their tenets, which were impressed more deeply by significant and awful ceremonies. A magician at Nicomedia first excited his curiosity, and tempted him to enter on these exciting courses. At Pergamus he visited the aged Ædesius; and the manner in which these philosophers passed Julian onward from one to another, as if through successive stages of initiation in their mysterious doctrines, bears the appearance of a deliberate scheme to work him up to their purposes. The aged Ædesius addressed him as the favoured child of wisdom; declined the important charge of his instruction, but commended him to his pupils, Eusebius and Chrysanthius, who could unlock the inexhaustible source of light and wisdom. should attain the supreme felicity of being initiated in their mysteries, you will blush to have been born a man, you will no longer endure the name." The pupils of Ædesius fed the greedy mind of the proselyte with all their stores of wisdom, and then skilfully unfolded the greater fame of Maximus.

^{*} Liban. Orat. Par. t. i. p. 526.

Eusebius professed to despise the vulgar arts of CHAP. wonder-working, at least in comparison with the purification of the soul; but he described the power of Maximus in terms to which Julian could not listen without awe and wonder. Maximus had led them into the temple of Hecate; he had burned a few grains of incense, he had murmured a hymn, and the statue of the goddess was seen to They were awe-struck, but Maximus declared that this was nothing. The lamps throughout the temple shall immediately burst into light: as he spoke, they kindled and blazed up. these mystical wonder-workers, we think lightly," proceeded the skilful speaker, "do thou, like us, think only of the internal purification of the reason." "Keep to your book," broke out the impatient youth, "this is the man I seek." * He hastened to Ephesus. The person and demeanour of Maximus were well suited to keep up the illusion. He was a venerable man, with a long white heard, with keen eyes, great activity, soft and persuasive voice, rapid and fluent eloquence. By Maximus, who summoned Chrysanthius to him, Julian was brought into direct communion with the invisible world. The faithful and officious Genii from this time watched over Julian in peace and war; they conversed with him in his slumbers, they warned him of dangers, they conducted his military operations. Thus far we proceed on the authority of Pagan writers; the scene of his solemn initiation rests on the more doubtful testimony of Christian historianst, which, as they were little likely to be admitted into the secrets of these dark and hidden rites, is to be received with grave suspicion, more especially as they do not scruple to embellish them with Christian miracle. Julian was led first into a temple, then into a subterranean crypt, in almost total darkness. evocations were made; wild and terrible sounds were heard; spectres of fire jibbered around. Julian, in his sudden terror, made the sign of the cross. All disappeared, all was silent. Twice this took place, and Julian could not but express to Maximus his astonishment at the power of this "The gods," returned the dexterous philosopher, "will have no communion with so profane a worshipper." From this time, it is said, on better authority*, that Julian burst, like a lion in his wrath, the slender ties which bound him to Christianity. But he was still constrained to dissemble his secret apostasy. His enemies declared that he redoubled his outward zeal for Christianity, and even shaved his head in conformity with the monastic practice. His brother Gallus had some suspicion of his secret views, and sent the Arian bishop Aetius to confirm him in the faith.

[†] Greg. Naz. Orat. iii. 71. The-odoret. iii. 3. * Eunapius, in Vit. Ædesii et

Conduct of Constantius to Julian.

How far Julian, in this time of danger, stooped to disguise his real sentiments, it were rash to decide. But it would by no means commend Christianity to the respect and attachment of Julian, that it was the religion of his imperial relative. Popular rumour did not acquit Constantius of the murder of Julian's father; and Julian himself afterwards publicly avowed his belief in this crime.* He had probably owed his own escape to his infant age and the activity of his friends. Up to this time, his life had been the precarious and permissive boon of a jealous tyrant, who had inflicted on him every kind of degrading restraint. His place of education had been a prison, and his subsequent liberty watched with suspicious The personal religion of Constantius; his embarking with alternate violence and subtlety in theological disputations; his vacillation between timid submission to priestly authority and angry persecution, were not likely to make a favourimpression on a wavering mind. Pagans themselves, if we may take the best historian of the time as the representative of their opinions †, considered that Constantius dishonoured the Christian religion by mingling up its perspicuous simplicity with anile superstition. If there was little genuine Christianity in the theological discussions of Constantius, there had been less of its beautiful practical spirit in his conduct to Ju-It had allayed no jealousy, mitigated no hatred; it had not restrained his temper from overbearing tyranny, nor kept his hands clean from And now, the death of his brother Gallus, to whom he seems to have cherished warm attachment, was a new evidence of the capricious and unhumanised tyranny of Constantius, a fearful omen of the uncertainty of his own life under such a despotism. He had beheld the advancement and the fate of his brother; and his future destiny presented the alternative either of ignominious obscurity or fatal distinction. His life was spared only through the casual interference of the humane and enlightened Empress; and her influence gained but a slow and difficult triumph over the malignant eunuchs, who ruled the mind But he had been exposed to the of Constantius. ignominy of arrest and imprisonment, and a fearful suspense of seven weary months.* His motions, his words, were watched; his very heart scrutinised; he was obliged to suppress the natural emotions of grief for the death of his brother; to impose silence on his fluent eloquence; and act the hypocrite to nature as well as to religion. was Athens, of all cities in the empire that, probably, in which Paganism still maintained the highest ascendancy, and appeared in the most attractive The political religion of Rome had its stronghold in the capital; that of Greece, in the centre of intellectual culture and of the fine arts. Athens might still be considered the university of the empire; from all quarters, particularly of the East, young men of talent and promise crowded to complete their studies in those arts of grammar, rhetoric, philosophy, which, however, by no means disdained by the Christians, might still be considered as more strictly attached to the Pagan interest.

CHAP. VI.

^{*} Ad Senatum Populumque Athenhems Hammianus Marcellinus. niensem. Julian. Oper. p. 270.

dered as more strictly attached to the Pagan interest.

Among the Christian students who at this time paid the homage of their residence to this great centre of intellectual culture, were Basil and Gregory of Nazianzum. The latter, in the orations with which in later times he condemned the memory of Julian, has drawn, with a coarse and unfriendly hand, the picture of his person and manners. manners did injustice to the natural beauties of his person, and betrayed his restless, inquisitive, and somewhat incoherent, character. The Christian (we must remember, indeed, that these predictions were published subsequent to their fulfilment, and that, by their own account, Julian had already betrayed, in Asia Minor, his secret propensities) already discerned in the unquiet and unsubmissive spirit, the future apostate. But the general impression which Julian made was far more favourable. His quickness, his accomplishments, the variety and extent of his information; his gentleness, his eloquence, and even his modesty, gained universal admiration, and strengthened the interest excited by his forlorn and perilous position.

Julian at Athens.

^{*} Έμε δε άφηκε μόγις, επτά μηνών όλων ελκύσας τήδε κακείσε. Al. S. P. Ath. p. 272.

Of all existing Pagan rites, those which still Julian maintained the greatest respect, and would im- Eleusis. press a mind like Julian's with the profoundest veneration, were the Eleusinian mysteries. united the sanctity of almost immemorial with some similitude to the Platonic Paganism of the day, at least sufficient for the ardent votaries of the latter to claim their alliance. The Hierophant of Eleusis was admitted to be the most potent theurgist in the world.* Julian honoured him, or was honoured by his intimacy; and the initiation in the Mystery of those, emphatically called the Goddesses, with all its appalling dramatic ma-

* Compare (in Eunap. Vit. credit to the sagacity, or evince Ædes. p. 52., edit. Boissonade) the prophecy of the dissolution of Paganism ascribed to this pon- of divine foreknowledge. tiff; a prediction which may do chinery, and its high speculative and imaginative doctrines, the impenetrable, the ineffable tenets of the sanctuary, consummated the work of Julian's conversion.

Elevation of Julian to the rank of Casar.

The elevation of Julian to the rank of Cæsar was at length extorted from the necessities, rather than freely bestowed by the love, of the Emperor. Nor did the jealous hostility of Constantius cease with this apparent reconciliation. Constantius, with cold suspicion, thwarted all his measures, crippled his resources, and appropriated to himself, with unblushing injustice, the fame of his victories.* Julian's assumption of the purple, whether forced upon him by the ungovernable attachment of his soldiery, or prepared by his own subtle ambition, was justified, and perhaps compelled, by the base ingratitude of Constantius; and by his manifest, if not avowed, resolution of preparing the ruin of Julian, by removing his best troops to the East. †

Death of Constantius. The timely death of Constantius alone prevented the deadly warfare in which the last of the race of Constantine were about to contest the empire. The dying bequest of that empire to Julian, said to have been made by the penitent Constantius, could not efface the recollection of those long years of degradation, of jealousy, of avowed or secret hostility; still less could it allay the dislike or con-

* Ammianus, l. xv. 8. et seqq. Socrates, iii. 1. Sozomen, v. n. La Bleterie, Vie de Julien, 89. et seqq. The campaigns of Julian, in La Bleterie, lib. ii. Gibbon, iv. pp. 1. 4.

pp. 1. 4.
The well-known passage in Ammianus shows the real sentiments of the court towards Julian. In odium venit cum victoriis suis capella non homo; ut hirsutum Julianum carpentes appellantesque loquacem talpam, et purpuratam simiam, et litterionem Græcum. Amm. Marc. xvii. 11.

† Amm. Marc. xx. &c. Zosimus, iii. Liban. Or. x. Jul. ad S. P. Q. A.

tempt of Julian for his weak and insolent predecessor, who, governed by eunuchs, wasted the precious time which ought to have been devoted to the cares of the empire, in idle theological discussions, or quarrels with contending ecclesiastics. The part in the character of the deceased Emperor least likely to find favour in the sight of his successor Julian was his religion. The unchrisian Christianity of Constantius must bear some part of the guilt of Julian's apostasy.

Up to the time of his revolt against Constantius, Conduct Julian had respected the dominant Christianity. The eligious acts of his early youth, performed in obedience, or under the influence of his instructors; or his submissive conformity, when his watchful enemies were eager for his life, ought hardly to convict him of deliberate hypocrisy. In Gaul, still under the strictest suspicion, and engaged in almost incessant warfare, he would have few opportunities to betray nis secret sentiments. But Jupiter was consulted n his private chamber, and sanctioned his assumpion of the imperial purple.* And no sooner nad he marched into Illyria, an independent Emperor, at the head of his own army, than he threw iside all concealment, and proclaimed himself a worshipper of the ancient gods of Paganism. The suspices were taken, and the act of divination was not the less held in honour, because the fortunate bothsayer announced the death of Constantius. The army followed the example of their victorious general. At his command, the neglected temples resumed their ceremonies; he adorned them wit offerings; he set the example of costly sacrifices. The Athenians in particular obeyed with alacrityth commands of the new Emperor; the honours the priesthood became again a worthy object contest; two distinguished females claimed th honour of representing the genuine Eumolpids and of officiating in the Parthenon. Julian, alread anxious to infuse as much of the real Christia spirit, as he could, into reviving Paganism, exhorte the contending parties to peace and unity, as the most acceptable sacrifice to the gods.

The death of Constantius left the whole Roma world open to the civil and religious schemes which lay, floating and unformed, before the imagination The civil reforms were executed with of Julian. necessary severity; but in some instances, will more than necessary cruelty. The elevation Paganism into a rational and effective faith, ar the depression, and even the eventual extinction of Christianity, were the manifest objects of J lian's religious policy. Julian's religion was tl eclectic Paganism of the new Platonic phil The chief speculative tenet was Orient rather than Greek or Roman. The one immateri inconceivable Father dwelt alone; though his m jesty was held in reverence, the direct and materi object of worship was the great Sun t, the livir easily practised upon than the Eastern soldiers at a subsequent and animated, and propitious and beneficent image CHAP. of the immaterial Father.* Below this primal Deity and his glorious image, there was room for the whole Pantheon of subordinate deities, of whom, in like manner, the stars were the material representatives; but who possessed invisible powers, and manifested themselves in various ways, in dreams and visions, through prodigies and oracles, the flights of birds, and the signs in the sacrificial victims.† This vague and comprehensive Paganism might conclude under its dominion all classes and nations which adhered to the Heathen worship; the Oriental, the Greek, the Roman, even, perhaps, the Northern barbarian, would not refuse to admit the simplicity of the primal article of the creed, spreading out as it did below into the boundless latitude of Polytheism. The immortality of the soul appears to follow as an inference from some of Julian's Platonic doctrines; but it is remarkable how rarely it is put forward as an important point of difference in his religious writings, while, in his private correspondence, he falls back to the dubious and hesitating language of the ancient Heathens: "I am not one of those who disbelieve ces of the subordinate deities, apud Cyril., lib. vii. p. 235.

* The Western army was more κατίλθοντος μοι στρατοπίδου Θεο δές έστιν. Epist. xxxviii. † Τον μέγαν "Ηλιον, το ζών άγο period. Θρησκεύομεν τοὺς θεοὺς μα καὶ ἔμψυχον, καὶ εὐνουν ι ἀναφανδὸν καὶ τὸ πλήθος τοῦ συγ- ἀγαθοεργὸν, τοῦ νοήτου πάτρος.

One of the most remarkable illustrations of this wide-spread worship of the sun is to be found in the address of Julius Firmicus Maternus to the Emperors Constantius and Constans. He introduces the sun as remonstrating ^{*} Compare Julian. apud Cyril, lib. ii. p. 65.

⁺ Julian asserts the various offi-against the dishonourable honours thus heaped upon him, and protests against being responsible for the acts, or involved in the fate, of Liber, Attys, or Osiris. Nolo ut errori vestro nomen meum fomenta suppeditet. * * Quicquid sum simpliciter Deo pareo, nec aliud volo de me intelligatis, nisi quod videtis. c. 8.

[‡] Lib. ii. 58.

BOOK the immortality of the soul; but the gods alone can know; man can only conjecture that secret*:" but his best consolation on the loss of friends was the saying of the Grecian philosopher to Darius, that if he would find three persons who had not suffered the like calamities, he would restore his beautiful wife to life.† His dying language, however, though still vague, and allied to the old Pantheistic system, sounds more like serene confidence in some future state of being.

Restoration of Paganism.

The first care of Julian was to restore the outward form of Paganism to its former splendour, and to infuse the vigour of reviving youth into the antiquated system. The temples were every where to be restored to their ancient magnificence; the municipalities were charged with the expense of these costly renovations. Where they had been destroyed by the zeal of the Christians, large fines were levied on the communities, and became, as will hereafter appear, a pretext for grinding exaction, and sometimes cruel persecution. It assessed on the whole community the penalty, merited, perhaps, only by the rashness of a few zealots; it revived outrages almost forgotten, and injuries perpetrated, perhaps, with the sanction, unquestionably with the connivance, of the former government. In many instances, it may have revenged on the innocent and peaceful, the crimes of the avaricious and irreligious, who either plundered under the θρώποις άρμόζει περί τοιούτων είκά- 412.

Οὐ γὰρ δὴ καὶ ἡμεὶς ἐσμεν τῶν ζειν, ἐπίστασθαι δὲ αὐτὰ τοὺς Θεοὸς πεπεισμένων τὰς ψυχάς ήτοι προ- ἀνάκη. Epist. lxiii. p. 452. απόλλυσθαι τῶν σωμάτων ἡ συνα- † Epistle to Amerius on the πόλλυσθαι. * * 'Ως τοῖς μὲν αν- loss of his wife. Ep. xxxvii. p.

mask of Christian zeal, or seized the opportunity, when the zeal of others might secure their impu-That which takes place in all religious revolutions, had occurred to a considerable extent: the powerful had seized the opportunity of plundering the weaker party for their own advantage. eunuchs and favourites of the court had fattened on the spoil of the temples.* If these men had been forced to regorge their ill-gotten gains, justice might have approved the measure, but their crimes were unfairly visited on the whole Christian body. The extent to which the ruin and spoliation of the temples had been carried in the East, may be estimated from the tragic lamentations of Libanius. The soul of Julian, according to the orator, burned for empire, in order to restore the ancient order of things.

In some respects, the success of Julian answered the high-wrought expectations of his partisans. His panegyrist indulges in this lofty language. then, I say, O mightiest Emperor, hast restored to the republic the expelled and banished virtues; thou hast rekindled the study of letters; thou hast not only delivered from her trial Philosophy, suspected heretofore and deprived of her honours, and even arraigned as a criminal, but hast clothed her in purple, crowned her with jewels, and seated her on the imperial throne. We may now look on the heavens, and contemplate the stars with fearless gaze.

[•] Pasti templorum spoliis, is temples. Χρήματα δὲ ἐτέλουν οἰ the strong expression of Ammi- τοῖς τῶν ἰερῶν λίθοις σφίσιν αὐτοῖς anus. Libanius says, that some οἰκίας ἐγείροντες. Orat. Parent. persons had built themselves p. 504. houses from the materials of the who, a short time ago, like the beasts of the field, fixed our downward and grovelling vision on the earth." * "First of all," says Libanius, "he re-established the exiled religion, building, restoring, embellishing the temples. Everywhere were altars and fires, and the blood and fat of sacrifice, and smoke, and sacred rites, and diviners, fearlessly performing their functions. And on the tops of mountains were pipings and processions, and the sacrificial ox, which was at once an offering to the gods and a banquet to men."† The private temple in the palace of Julian, in which he worshipped daily, was sacred to the Sun; but he founded altars to all the gods. He looked with especial favour on those cities which had retained their temples, with abhorrence on those which had suffered them to be destroyed, or to fall to ruin. ‡

Julian so entirely misapprehended Christianity, as to attribute its success and influence to its internal organisation, rather than to its internal authority over the soul of man. He thought that the religion grew out of the sacerdotal power, not that the sacerdotal power was but the vigorous development of the religion. He fondly supposed that the imperial edict, and the authority of the government, could supply the place of profound religious sentiment, and transform the whole Pagan priesthood, whether attached to the dissolute worship of the East, the elegant ceremonial of Greece, ^{*} Mam. Grat. Act. c. xxiii. This many passages; likewise, the Oraclause refers, no doubt, to astrology and divination.

tio pro Templis, and the Monodia. † Orat. Parent. p. 564.

⁺ See v. 1. p. 529. one among or the graver ritual of Rome, into a serious, highly moral, and blameless hierarchy. The Emperor was to be at once the supreme head, and the model of this new sacerdotal order. The sagacious mind of Julian might have perceived the dangerous power, growing up in the Christian episcopate, which had already encroached upon the imperial authority, and began to divide the allegiance of the world. His political apprehensions may have concurred with his religious animosities, in not merely endeavouring to check the increase of this power, but in desiring to concentrate again in the imperial person both branches of authority. The supreme pontificate of Paganism had indeed passed quietly down with the rest of the imperial titles and functions. But the interference of the Christian emperors in ecclesiastical affairs had been met with resistance, obeyed only with sullen reluctance, or but in deference to the strong arm of power. The doubtful issue of the conflict between the Emperor and his religious antagonist might awaken reasonable alarm for the majesty of the empire. If, on the other hand, Julian should succeed in reorganising the Pagan priesthood in efficiency, respect, and that moral superiority which now belonged to the Christian ecclesiastical system, the supreme pontificate, instead of being a mere appellation, or an appendage to the imperial title, would be an office of unlimited influence and authority.* The Emperor

F 4

^{*} See the curious fragment of the sixty-second epistle, p. 450, in which Julian asserts his supremacy not merely as Pontifex Maximus, but as holding a high rank among the worshippers of Cybele. Έγω τοίνον ἐπειδη πὲρ εἰμι κατὰ in which Julian asserts his supremacy τὰ πάτρια μεγὰς ᾿Αρχιερέυς, ελαχον δὲ νῦν καὶ τοῦ Διδυμαίου προφητεδειν.

BOOK III. Julian's new priestbood.

would be the undisputed and unrivalled head of the religion of the empire; the whole sacerdotal order would be at his command; Paganism, instead of being, as heretofore, a confederacy of different religions, an aggregate of local systems of worship, each under its own tutelar deity, would become a wellregulated monarchy, with its provincial, civic, and village priesthoods, acknowledging the supremacy, and obeying the impulse, of the high imperial functionary. Julian admitted the distinction between the priest and the laity.* In every province a supreme pontiff was to be appointed, charged with a superintendence over the conduct of the inferior priesthood, and armed with authority to suspend or to depose those who should be guilty of any indecent irregularity. The whole priesthood were to be sober, chaste, temperate in all things. They were to abstain, not merely from loose society, but, in a spirit diametrically opposite to the old religion, were rarely to be seen at public festivals, never where women mingled in them. † In private houses, they were only to be present at the moderate banquets of the virtuous; they were never to be seen drinking in taverns, or exercising any base or sordid trade. The priesthood were to stand aloof from society, and only mingle with it to infuse their own grave decency, and unimpeachable moral tone. The theatre, that second temple, as it might be called, of the older religion, was sternly ^{* &#}x27;Επὲι σοὶ ποῦ μίτεστιν ἐμπεί- οἶσθα τί μὲν ἰερευς, τί δὲ ἰδιώτης. ριας (ὅλως) τῶν δικαίων, ὅς οὐκ Fragm. Epist. lxii.

† See Epist. xlix.

proscribed; so entirely was it considered sunk CHAP. from its high religious character, so incapable of being restored to its old moral influence. were to avoid all books, poetry, or tales, which might inflame their passions; to abstain altogether from those philosophical writings which subverted the foundations of religious belief, those of the Pyrrhonists and Epicureans, which Julian asserts had happily fallen into complete neglect, and had almost become obsolete. They were to be diligent and liberal in almsgiving, and to exercise hospitality on the most generous scale. The Jews had no beggars, the Christians maintained, indiscriminately, all applicants to their charity; it was a disgrace to the Pagans to be inattentive to such duties; and the authority of Homer is alleged to show the prodigal hospitality of the older Greeks. They were to establish houses His chaof reception for strangers in every city, and thus to stitutions rival or surpass the generosity of the Christians. Supplies of corn from the public granaries were assigned for these purposes, and placed at the disposal of the priests, partly for the maintenance of their attendants, partly for these pious uses. They were to pay great regard to the burial of the dead, a subject on which Grecian feeling had always been peculiarly sensitive, particularly of strangers. The benevolent institutions of Christianity were to imitated be imitated and associated to Paganism. A tax was tianity. to be levied in every province for the maintenance of the poor, and distributed by the priesthood. Hospitals for the sick and for indigent strangers of BOOK IIL every creed were to be formed in convenient places. The Christians, not without justice, called the Emperor "the ape of Christianity." Of all homage to the Gospel, this was the most impressive and sincere; and we are astonished at the blindness of Julian in not perceiving that these changes, which thus enforced his admiration, were the genuine and permanent results of the religion; but the disputes, and strifes, and persecutions, the accidental and temporary effects of human passions, awakened by this new and violent impulse on the human mind.

Ritual.

Something like an universal ritual formed part of the design of Julian. Three times a day prayer was to be publicly offered in the temples. The powerful aid of music, so essential a part of the older and better Grecian instruction, and of which the influence is so elevating to the soul *, was called in to impress the minds of the worshippers. Each temple was to have its organised band of choristers. A regular system of alternate chanting was introduced. It would be curious, if it were possible, to ascertain whether the Grecian temples received back their own music and their alternately responding chorus from the Christian churches.

Respect for temples.

Julian would invest the Pagan priesthood in that respect, or rather that commanding majesty, with which the profound reverence of the Christian world arrayed their hierarchy. Solemn silence was to reign in the temples. All persons in authority were to leave their guards at the door when they entered the hallowed precincts. The Emperor himself forbade the usual acclamations on his en- CHAP. trance into the presence of the gods. Directly, he touched the sacred threshold, he became a private man.

^{*} On Music. See Epist. lvi.

It is said that he meditated a complete course of Religious instruction. religious instruction. Schoolmasters, catechists. preachers, were to teach, — are we to suppose the Platonic philosophy?—as a part of the religion. A penitential form was to be drawn up for the readmission of transgressors into the fold. Instead of throwing open the temples to the free and promiscuous reception of apostatising Christians, the value of the privilege was to be enhanced by the difficulty of attaining it.* They were to be slowly admitted to the distinction of rational believers in the gods. The dii averruncatores (atoning deities) were to be propitiated; they were to pass through different degrees of initiation. Prayers, expiations, lustrations, severe trials, could alone purify their bodies and their minds, and make them worthy participants in the Pagan mysteries.

But Julian was not content with this moral re- Animal generation of Paganism; he attempted to bring sacrifices. back the public mind to all the sanguinary ritual of sacrifice, to which the general sentiment had been gradually growing unfamiliar and repugnant. The time was passed when men could consider the favour of the gods propitiated according to the number of slaughtered beasts. The philosophers must have smiled in secret over the superstition of the philosophic Emperor. Julian himself washed off his Christian baptism by the new Oriental rite of aspersion by blood, the Taurobolia or Kriobolia of the Mithriac mysteries*; he was regenerated anew to Paganism. † This indeed was a secret ceremony; but Julian was perpetually seen, himself wielding the sacrificial knife, and exploring with his own hands the reeking entrails of the victims to learn the secrets of futurity. The enormous expenditure lavished on the sacrifices, the hecatomb of cattle, the choice birds from all quarters, drained the revenue.‡ The Western soldiers, especially the intemperate Gauls, indulged in the feasts of the victims to such excess, and mingled them with such copious libations of wine, as to be carried to their tents amid the groans and mockeries of the more The gifts to diviners, soothsavers, and imposters of all classes, offended equally the more wise and rational. In the public, as well as private, conduct of Julian, there was a Heathen Pharisaism. an attention to minute and trifling observances, which could not but excite contempt even in the more enlightened of his own party. Every morning and evening he offered sacrifice to the sun; he rose at night to offer the same homage to the moon and stars. Every day brought the rite of some other god; he was constantly seen prostrate ^{*} Gregor. Naz. iii. p. 70.

[†] The person initiated descended into a pit or trench, and through a kind of sieve, or stone pierced with holes, the blood of the bull or the ram was poured over his whole person.

[‡] Julian acknowledges the reluctance to sacrifice in many parts.

[&]quot;Show me," he says, to the philosopher Aristomenes, "a genuine Greek in Cappadocia." Τέως γάρ τους μέν ου βουλομένους, δολίγους δὶ τινας ἰθιλοντας μέν, ουκ εἰδότας δὶ θύειν, ὁρῶ. Epist. iv. p. 375.
§ I do not believe the story of

[§] I do not believe the story of human sacrifices in Alexandria and Athens, Socrat. E. H. iii. 13.

before the image of the deity, busying himself CHAP. about the ceremony, performing the menial offices of cleansing the wood, and kindling the fire with his own breath, till the victim was ready for the imperial hands.*

Instead of the Christian hierarchy, Julian has- Philosotened to environ himself with the most distin- phers. guished of the Heathen philosophers. Most of these, indeed, pretended to be a kind of priesthood. Intercessors between the deities and the world of man, they wrought miracles, foresaw future events; they possessed the art of purifying the soul, so that it should be reunited to the Primal Spirit: the Divinity dwelt within them.

The obscurity of the names which Julian thus set up to rival in popular estimation an Athanasius or a Gregory of Nazianzum, is not altogether to be ascribed to the final success of Christianity. The impartial verdict of posterity can scarcely award to these men a higher appellation than that of sophists and rhetoricians. The subtlety and ingenuity of these more imaginative, perhaps, but far less profound, schoolmen of Paganism, were wasted on idle reveries, on solemn trifling, and questions which it was alike useless to agitate, and impossible to solve. The hand of death was alike upon the religion, the philosophy, the eloquence. of Greece; and the temporary movement which Julian excited was but a feeble quivering, a last impotent struggle, preparatory to total dissolution. Maximus appears, in his own time, to have been the most eminent of his class. The writings of Libanius and of Iamblichus alone survive, to any extent, the general wreck of the later Grecian literature. The genius and the language of Plato were alike wanting in his degenerate disciples. Julian himself is, perhaps, the best, because the plainest and most perspicuous, writer of his time: and the "Cæsars" may rank as no unsuccessful attempt at satiric irony.

^{*} Innumeros sine parsimoniá tisset de Parthis, boves jam defec-mactans; ut crederetur, si rever- turos. Amn. Marc. xxv. 4.

laximus.

Maximus was the most famous of the school. He had been among the early instructors of Julian. The Emperor had scarcely assumed the throne, when he wrote to Maximus in the most urgent and flattering terms: life was not life without Maximus obeyed the summons. journey through Asia Minor, the cities vied with each other in doing honour to the champion of Paganism. When the Emperor heard of his arrival in Constantinople, though engaged in an important public ceremonial, he broke it off at once, and hastened to welcome his philosophic guest. The roads to the metropolis were crowded with sophists, hurrying to bask in the sunshine of imperial favour.† The privilege of travelling at the public cost, by the posting establishment of the empire, so much abused by Constantius in favour of the bishops, was now conceded to some despised the youths who embraced philosophy as a fashion. Κορσ-ξαντιώντων ἐπὶ σοφία μειρακίων. Vit. Prisc. apud Eunap., ed. Boisson, p. 67.

^{*} Epist. xv. The nameless person to whom the first epistle is addressed is declared superior to Pythagoras or Plato. Epist. i. p. 372.

⁺ The severe and grave Priscus of the philosophers. Chrysanthius, another sophist of great reputation, was more modest and more prudent; he declined the dazzling honour, and preferred the philosophic quiet of his native town. Julian appointed him, with his wife, to the highpriesthood of Lydia; and Chrysanthius, with the prophetic discernment of worldly wisdom, kept on amicable terms with the Christians. Of Libanius. Julian writes in rapturous admiration. chus had united all that was excellent in the ancient philosophy and poetry; Pindar, Democritus, and Orpheus, were blended in his perfect and harmonious syncretism.* The wisdom of Iamblichus so much dazzled and overawed the Emperor that he dared not intrude too much of his correspondence on the awful sage. "One of his letters surpassed in value all the gold of Lydia." The influence of men over their own age may in general be estimated by the language of contemporary writers. The admiration they excite is the test of their power, at least with their own party. The idolatry of the philosophers is confined to the few initiate; and even with their own party, the philosophers disappointed the high expectations which they had excited of their dignified superiority to the baser interests and weaknesses of They were by no means proof against the intoxication of court favour; they betrayed their vanity, their love of pleasure. Maximus himself is accused of assuming the pomp and inso-

CHAP. VI.

lence of a favourite; the discarded eunuchs had been replaced, it was feared, by a new, not less intriguing or more disinterested, race of courtiers.

Toleration of Julian.

To the Christians, Julian assumed the language of the most liberal toleration. His favourite orator thus describes his policy. "He thought that neither fire nor sword could change the faith of mankind: the heart disowns the hand which is compelled by terror to sacrifice. Persecutions only make hypocrites, who are unbelievers throughout life, or martyrs, honoured after death.* He strictly prohibited the putting to death the Galileans (his favourite appellation of the Christians), as worthy rather of compassion than of hatred.† "Leave them to punish themselves, poor, blind, and misguided beings, who abandon the most glorious privilege of mankind, the adoration of the immortal gods, to worship the mouldering remains and bones of the dead." He did not perceive that it was now too late to reassume the old Roman contempt for the obscure and foreign religion. Christianity had sate on the throne; and disdain now sounded like mortified pride. And the language, even the edicts, of the Emperor, under the smooth mask of gentleness and pity, betrayed the bitterness of hostility. His conduct was a perpetual sarcasm. It was the interest of Paganism ^{*} Liban. Orat. Parent. v. i.

[†] He asserts, in his 7th epistle, that he is willing neither to put to death, nor to injure the Christians in any manner, but the worshippers of the gods were on all occasions to be preferred—προτιμάσθαι. Compare Epist, lii.

† His usual phrase was, "worshippers of the dead, and of the bones of men."

to inflame, rather than to allay, the internal feuds CHAP. of Christianity. Julian revoked the sentence of banishment pronounced against Arians, Apollina- His rians, and Donatists. He determined, it is said, tone. to expose them to a sort of public exhibition of intellectual gladiatorship. He summoned the advocates of the several sects to dispute in his presence, and presided with mock solemnity over their debates. His own voice was drowned in the clamour, till at length, as though to contrast them, to their disadvantage, with the wild barbarian warriors with whom he had been engaged,—"Hear me," exclaimed the Emperor; "the Franks and the Alemanni have heard me." "No wild beasts," he said, "are so savage and intractable as Christian sectaries." He even endured personal insult. The statue of the "Fortune of Constantinople," bearing a cross in its hand, had been set up by Constantine. Julian took away the cross, and removed the Deity into a splendid temple. While he was employed in sacrifice, he was interrupted by the remonstrances of Maris, the Arian bishop of Chalcedon, to whom age and blindness had added courage. "Peace," said the Emperor, "blind old man, thy Galilean God will not restore thine evesight." "I thank my God," answered Maris, "for my blindness, which spares me the pain of beholding an apostate like thee." Julian calmly proceeded in his sacrifice.*

The sagacity of Julian perceived the advantage to be obtained by contrasting the wealth, the power, of Iamblichus. Julian perceived the danger, and CHAP. resented this usurpation, as it were, of the arms of Paganism, and their employment against their legitimate parent. It is not, indeed, quite clear how far, or in what manner, the prohibition of Julian affected the Christians. A general system of Education education, for the free and superior classes, had of the higher gradually spread through the empire. * city maintained a certain number of professors, according to its size and population, who taught grammar, rhetoric, and philosophy. They were appointed by the magistracy, and partly paid from the municipal funds. Vespasian first assigned stipends to professors in Rome, the Antonines extended the establishment to the other cities of the They received two kinds of emoluments: the salary from the city, and a small fixed gratuity They enjoyed considerable from their scholars. immunities, exemption from military and civil service, and from all ordinary taxation. There can be no doubt that this education, as originally designed, was more or less intimately allied with the ancient religion. The grammarians, the poetst. the orators, the philosophers of Greece and Rome, were the writers whose works were explained and instilled into the youthful mind. "The vital principle, Julian asserted, in the writings of Homer, Hesiod, Demosthenes, Herodotus, Thucydides,

* Socrates, iii. 12.

^{*} There is an essay on the 399.

⁺ Homer, then considered, if not professors and general system of the parent, the great authority for ducation, by Monsieur Naudet, the Pagan mythology, was the Mém. de l'Institut., vol. x. p. elementary school-book.

BOOK 111.

Isocrates, Lysias, was the worship of th Some of these writers had dedicated them Mercury, some to the Muses. Muses were the tutelar deities of the ragan school The Christians had glided imperceptibly into of these offices, and perhaps some of the profession had embraced Christianity. But Julian declared that the Christians must be shameful hypocritis or the most sordid of men, who, for a few draches would teach what they did not believe. 1 Emperor might, with some plausibility, haveing that the ministers of public instruction paid by state, or from public funds, should at least not k If the proble hostile to the religion of the state. tion extended no farther than their exclusion from public professorships, the measure might have well some appearance of equity; but it was the avored policy of Julian to exclude them, if possible, for all advantages derived from the liberal study Greek letters. The original edict disclaimed intention of compelling the Christians to attend the Pagan schools; but it contemptuously asserte the right of the government to control men! completely out of their senses, and, at the su time, affected condescension to their weakness ! obstinacy.† But if the Emperor did not com them to learn, he forbade them to teach.

communem usum Juliani proximà denegarunt. Amb Fpist. Resp. ad Symmach. + Julian. Epist. xlii. p. Sozomen, v. 18. Theodoret. Sozomen, v. 18. Greg. Naz.

^{*} When Christianity resumed the ascendancy, this act of intolerance was adduced in justifica-tion of the severities of Theodosius against Paganism. Petunt Socrates, v. 18. etiam, ut illis privilegia deferas, qui loquendi et docendi nostris iii. p. 51. 96, 97.

interdict, no doubt, extended to their own private and separate schools for Hellenic learning. They were not to instruct in Greek letters without the sanction of the municipal magistracy. He added insult to this narrow prohibition: he taunted them with their former avowed contempt for human learning; he would not permit them to lay their profane hands on Homer and Plato. them be content to explain Matthew and Luke in the churches of the Galileans."* Some of the Christian professors obeyed the imperial edict.† Proæresius, who taught rhetoric with great success at Rome, calmly declined the overtures of the Emperor, and retired into a private station. Musonius, a rival of the great Proæresius, was silenced. But they resorted to an expedient which shows that they had full freedom of Christian instruction. A Christian Homer, a Christian Pindar, and other works were composed in which Christian sentiments and opinions were interwoven into the language of the original poets. The piety of the age greatly admired these Christian parodies, which, however, do not seem to have maintained their ground even in the Christian schools. ‡

Julian is charged with employing unworthy or insidious arts to extort an involuntary assent to Pagan-cere magistros, rhetoricos, et grammaticos, ritûs Christiani cultores. Amm. Marcell. xx. c. 10.

^{*} Julian. Epist. xlv.
† The more liberal Heathens were disgusted and ashamed at this measure of Julian. Illud autem erat inclemens, obruendum perenni silentio, quod arcebat do-

[‡] After the death of Julian, they were contemptuously thrown aside by the Christians themselves. Τῶν δὲ οῖ πόνοι ἐν τῷ ἴσῳ μὴ γραφῆναι, λογίζονται. Socrates, E. H. iii. 16.

Arts of Julian to undermine Christianity.

Heathen symbols every where replaced those of Christianity. The medals display a great variety of deities, with their attributes. Jupiter is crowning the Emperor, Mars and Mercury inspire him with military skill and eloquence. The monogram of Christ disappeared from the labarum, and on the standards were represented the gods of Pagan-As the troops defiled before the Emperor, each man was ordered to throw a few grains of frankincense upon an altar which stood before him. The Christians were horror-stricken, when they found that, instead of an act of legitimate respect to the Emperor, they had been betrayed into paying homage to idols. Some bitterly lamented their involuntary sacrilege, and indignantly threw down their arms; some of them are said to have surrounded the palace, and loudly avowing that they were Christians, reproached the Emperor with his treachery, and cast down the largess that they had received. For this breach of discipline and insult to the Emperor, they were led out to military execution. They vied with each other, it is said, for the honours of martyrdom. But the bloody scene was interrupted by a messenger from the Emperor, who contented himself with expelling them from the army, and sending them into banishment.

Persecu-

Actual persecutions, though unauthorised by the imperial edicts, would take place in some parts ^{*} Jovian, Valentinian, and Valens, the future Emperors, are said Julian, however, declined to accept the resignation of the former.

CHAP. VI.

from the collision of the two parties. The Pagans, now invested in authority, would not be always disposed to use that authority with discretion, and the Pagan populace would seize the opportunity of revenging the violation of their temples, or the interruption of their rites, by the more zealous Christians. No doubt the language of an address delivered to Constantius and Constans expressed the sentiments of a large party among the Chris-"Destroy without fear, destroy ye, most religious Emperors, the ornaments of the temples. Coin the idols into money, or melt them into useful metal. Confiscate all their endowments for the advantage of the Emperor and of the government. God has sanctioned, by your recent victories, your hostility to the temples." The writer proceeds to thunder out the passages of the Mosaic law, which enforce the duty of the extirpation of idolaters.* No doubt, in many places, the eager fanaticism of the Christians had outstripped the tardy movements of imperial zeal. In many cases it would now be thought an act of religion to reject, in others, it would be impossible to satisfy, the demands for restitution. The best authenticated acts of direct persecution relate to these disputes. Nor can Julian himself be exculpated from the guilt, if not of conniving at, of faintly rebuking these tumultuous acts of revenge or of wanton outrage. In some of the Syrian towns, Gaza, Hieropolis, and Cæsarea, the Pagans had perpetrated cruelties too horrible to detail. Not content with massacring the Christians, with every kind of indignity, they had treated their lifeless remains with unprecedented outrage. They sprinkled the entrails of their victims with barley, that the fowls might be tempted to devour them. At Heliopolis, their cannibal fury did not shrink from tasting the blood and the inward parts of murdered priests and virgins. Julian calmly expresses his regret that the restorers of the temples of the gods have in some instances exceeded his expressed intentions; which, however, seem to have authorised the destruction of the Christian churches, or at least some of their sacred places.*

^{*} Julius Firmicus Maternus, de Errore Profanorum Religionum, c. 29.

BOOK

Restoration of temples.

Julian contends on ill-chosen ground. Julian made an inauspicious choice in the battle-field on which he attempted to decide his conflict with Christianity. Christianity predominated to a greater extent in Constantinople and in Antioch than in any other cities of the empire. In Rome he might have appealed to the antiquity of Heathenism, and its eternal association with the glories of the republic. In Athens, he would have combined in more amicable confederacy the philosophy and the religion. In Athens his accession had given a considerable impulse to Paganism, the temples with the rest of the public

* Greg. Nazianz. Socrates, iii. 14. Sozomen, v. 9. Compare Gibbon, vol. iv. p. 116., who has referred the following passage in the Misopogon to these scenes.

Οῖ τὰ μξυ τῶν θεῶν ἀνέστησαν αὐτίκα τεμίνη τοὺς τάφους δὲ τῶν ἀθέων ἀνέτρεψαν πάντας ὑπὸ τοῦ συιθήματος, ὅ δὴ δέδοται παρ' ἐμοῦ πρώην, οὕτως ἐπάρθεντες τὸν νοῦν, καὶ μετέωροι γενόμενοι την διανοίαν, ώς καὶ πλέον ἐπεξελθεῖν τοῖς εἰς τοὺς Θεοὺς πλημμελοῦσιν, ἢ βουλωμένψ μοι ἦν. Misopogon, p. 361.

Did he mean by the ráso: chapels, like those built over the remains of St. Babylas, in the Daphne, at Antioch, or the churches in general?

buildings, had renewed their youth.* Eleusis, which had fallen into ruin, now reassumed its splendour, and might have been wisely made the centre of his new system. But in Constantinople all was modern and Christian. Piety to the imperial founder was closely connected with devotion to his religion. Julian could only restore the fanes of the tutelary gods of old Byzantium; he could strip the fortune of the city of her Christian attributes, but he could not give a Pagan character to a city which had grown up under Christian auspices. Constantinople remained contumaciously Constanand uniformly Christian. Antioch had been a chief tinople. seat of that mingled Oriental and Grecian worship Antioch. of the Sun which had grown up in all the Hellenised parts of Asia; the name of Daphne given to the sacred grove, implied that the fictions of Greece had been domiciliated in Syria. was now divided by two incongruous, but equally dominant passions, devotion to Christianity and attachment to the games, the theatre, and every kind of public amusement. The bitter sarcasms of Julian on the latter subject are justified and confirmed by the grave and serious admonitions of Chrysostom. By a singular coincidence, Antioch came into collision with the strongest prejudices of His very virtues were fatal to his success in the re-establishment of Paganism; its connection

CHAP.

* Mamertinus, probably, highly privatimque perdiderant. In mi-paints the ruin, that he may exalt serandam ruinam conciderat Eleuartium magistræ et inventrices p. 147. Athenæ omnem cultum publicè the restorer. Ipsæ illæ bonarum sina. Mamert. Grat. Actio. ix.

with the amusements of the people Julian repudiated with philosophic disdain. Instead of attempting to purify the degenerate taste, he had all the austerity of a Pagan monk. Public exhibitions were interdicted to his reformed priesthood; once. at the beginning of the year, the Emperor entered the theatre, remained in undisguised weariness, and withdrew in disgust. He was equally impatient of wasting his time as a spectator of the chariot race; he attended occasionally, out of respect to the presiding deity of the games; saw five or six courses, Yet Paganism might appear to weland retired.* come Julian to Antioch. It had still many followers, who clung with fond attachment to its pomps and gay processions. The whole city poured forth to receive him; by some he was hailed as a deity. It happened to be the festival of Adonis, and the loud shouts of welcome to the Emperor were mingled with the wild and shrill cries of the women, wailing that Syrian symbol of the universal deity. the Sun. It might seem an awful omen that the rites which mourned the departure of the genial deity should welcome his ardent worshipper.† The outward appearance of religion must have affected Julian with alternate hope and disappointment. From all quarters, diviners, augurs, magicians, enchanters, the priests of Cybele, and of the other Eastern religions, flocked to Antioch. His palace was crowded with men, whom Chrysostom describes

Julian at Antioch.

^{} Misopogon, p 339, 340. nuo cursu completo Adonica ritu Amm. xxii. 9. veteri 'celebrari. Amm. Marc. † Evenerat iisdem diebus anas branded with every crime, as infamous for poison- CHA ings and witchcrafts. "Men who had grown old in prisons and in the mines, and who maintained their wretched existence by the most disgraceful trades, were suddenly advanced to places of dignity, and invested with the priesthood and sacrificial functions." The severe Julian, as he passed through the city, was encircled by the profligate of every age, and by prostitutes, with their wanton laughter and shameless language. Among the former, the ardent, youthful, and ascetic preacher, probably included all the Theurgists of the philosophic school; the latter describes the festal processions, which no doubt retained much of their old voluptuous character. Julian ascended the lofty top of Mount Casius, to Temple solemnise, under the broad and all-embracing cope Casius. of heaven, the rites of Jupiter Philius. † But in the luxurious grove of Daphne, he was doomed to The a melancholy disappointment. The grove remained with all its beautiful scenery, its shady recesses, its cool and transparent streams, in which the Heathen inhabitants of Antioch had mingled their religious rites with their private enjoyments. But a serious gloom, a solemn quiet, pervaded the whole place. The temple of Apollo, the magnificent edifice in which the devotion of former ages had sacrificed hecatombs, where the clouds of incense had soared above the grove, and in which the pomp of Oriental worship had assembled half ^{*} Chrysostom contra Gent. † The Jupiter Philius, or on the medals of the city. St. Casius. This god was the tuteMartin, note to Le Beau, iii. 6.

Syria, was silent and deserted. He expected (in his own words •) a magnificent procession, victims, libations, dances, incense, boys with white and graceful vests, and with minds as pure and unspotted, dedicated to the service of the god. He entered the temple; he found a solitary priest, with a single goose for sacrifice. The indignant Emperor poured out his resentment in the bitterest language; he reproached the impiety, the shameful parsimony of the inhabitants, who enjoyed the large estates attached to the temple, and thus neglected its services; who at the same time permitted their wives to lavish their treasures on the infamous Galileans, and on their scandalous banquets, called the Maiuma.

Remains of Babylas,

Julian determined to restore the majesty of the temple and worship of Apollo. But it was first necessary to dispossess the Christian usurper of the sacred place. The remains of Babylas, the martyred Bishop of Antioch, who had suffered, probably in the Decian persecution, had been removed eleven years before to Daphne; and the Christians crowded to pay their devotions near his tomb. The Christians assert, that the baffled Apollo confessed himself abashed in the presence of the saint: his oracle dared not break silence. † At all events, Julian determined to purify the grove from the contamination of this worship. The remains of Babylas were ordered to be transported back to They were met by a solemn procession Antioch. of a great part of the inhabitants. The relics were raised on a chariot, and conducted in triumph, with the excited multitude dancing before it, and thundering out the maledictory psalm: - "Confounded be all they that worship carved images, and delight in vain idols." Julian attempted to punish this outburst of popular feeling. But the firmness of the first victim who endured the torture, and the remonstrances of the Præfect Sallust, brought him back to his better temper of mind. The restoration of the temple proceeded with zealous haste. A splendid peristyle arose around it; when at midnight Julian received the intelligence that the temple was on fire. The roof and all the ornaments were entirely consumed, and the statue of the Fire in the god himself, of gilded wood, yet of such astonishing workmanship that it is said to have enforced the homage of the conquering Sapor, was burned to ashes. The Christians beheld the manifest wrath of Heaven. and asserted that the lightning had come down and smitten the idolatrous edifice. Julian ascribed the conflagration to the malice of the Christians. most probable account is, that a devout worshipper had lighted a number of torches before an image of the Queen of Heaven, which had set fire to some part of the building. Julian exacted, as it were, reprisals on Christianity; he ordered the cathedral of Antioch to be closed. His orders were executed with insult to the sacred place, and the spoliation of the sacred vessels.*

* Misopogon, 362. + Chrysostom, Orat, in S. Babylam.

Julian, in the meantime, was not regardless of the advancement of the Pagan interest in other parts of the empire. Alexandria could not be Alexanat peace while any kind of religious excitement The character of inflamed the minds of men.

* Amm. Marc. xxii. 13. Theodor. iii. 11. Sozomen, v. 20.

BOOK
III.

George,
Arian
Bishop of Alexandria

George, the Arian bishop of Alexandria, is loaded by Heathen as well as by Christian writers with every kind of obloquy. birth; the base and sordid occupations of his youth; his servile and intriguing meanness in manhood; his tyranny in power, trace, as it were, his whole life with increasing odiousness. extraordinary as it may seem, the Arian party could find no man of better reputation to fill this important post; and George, the impartial tyrant of all parties, perished at last, the victim of his zealous hostility to Paganism. A chief cause of the unpopularity of George was the assertion of the imperial right over the fee-simple of the land on which Alexandria was built. This right was gravely deduced from Alexander the Great. During the reign of Constantius, George had seized every opportunity of depressing and insulting Paganism; he had interdicted the festivals and the sacrifices of the Heathen; he had pillaged the gifts, the statues, and ornaments of their temple; he had been heard, as he past the temple either of Serapis himself. or of the Fortune of the city, to utter the contemptuous expression, "How long will this sepulchre be permitted to stand?"* 'He had discovered a cave where the Mithriac mysteries were said to have been carried on with a horrible sacrifice of human life. The heads of a number of youths were exposed (probably disinterred from some old cemetery near which these rites had been established), as of the victims of this sanguinary idolatry. These insults and outrages rankled in the hearts of ^{*} Amm. Marcell. xxii. 11. Socrates, iii. 2.

the Pagans. The fate of Artemius, the Duke of CHAP. Egypt, the friend and abettor of George in all his. tyrannical proceedings, prepared the way for that of George. Artemius was suspected of being concerned in the death of Gallus. He was charged with enormous delinquencies by the people of Alexandria. Whether as a retribution for the former offence against the brother of Julian, or as the penalty for his abuse of his authority in his government, Artemius was condemned to death. intelligence of his execution was the signal for a general insurrection of the Pagans in Alexandria. The palace of George was invested by a frantic mob. In an instant he was dragged forth, murdered, trampled under foot, dragged along the streets, and at length torn limb from limb. With His death. him perished two officers of the empire, Dracontius, master of the mint, and the Count Diodorus; the one accused of having destroyed an altar of Serapis, the other of having built a church. The mangled remains of these miserable men were paraded through the streets on the back of a camel, and at length, lest they should be enshrined and worshipped as the relics of martyrs, cast into the sea. The Christians, however, of all parties, appear to have looked with unconcern on the fate of this episcopal tyrant*, whom, the general hatred, if it did not excite them to assist in his massacre, prevented them from attempting to defend. Julian addressed a letter to the people of Alexandria. While he admitted, in the strongest terms, the guilt of George, he severely rebuked their violence and presumption in thus taking the law into their own hands, and the horrible inhumanity of tearing like dogs the bodies of men in pieces, and then presuming to lift up their blood-stained hands to the gods. He admitted that their indignation for their outraged temples and insulted gods might naturally madden them to just resentment; but they should have awaited the calm and deliberate course of justice, which would have exacted the due punishment from the offender. Julian secured to himself part of the spoils of the murdered prelate. George had a splendid library, rich not merely in the writings of the Galileans, but, what Julian esteemed as infinitely more precious, the works of the Greek orators and philo-The first he would willingly have destroyed, the latter he commanded to be carefully reserved for his own use.*

^{*} Poterantque miserandi ho- ni Georgii odio omnes indiscretè mines ad crudele supplicium devoti, flagrabant. Ammian. Marcell. Christianorum adjumento defendi, xxii. 11.

In the place of George arose a more powerful adversary. Julian knew and dreaded the charac-Athanasius, ter of Athanasius, who, during these tumults, had quietly resumed his authority over the orthodox The general edict of Christians of Alexandria. Julian for the recall of all exiles contained no exception; and Athanasius availed himself of its protecting authority.† Under his auspices, the church, even in these disastrous times, resumed its vigour. The Arians, terrified perhaps by the hostility of the Pagans, hastened to reunite themselves to the church; and Julian heard, with bitter indignation.

^{*} Julian. Epist. ix. & x.

[†] Julian. Epist. xxvi. p. 398.

that some Pagan females had received baptism from Athanasius. Julian expressed his astonishment, not that Athanasius had returned from exile, but that he had dared to resume his see. He ordered him into instant banishment. He appealed, in a letter to the præfect, to the mighty Serapis, that if Athanasius, the enemy of the gods, was not expelled from the city before the calends of December, he should impose a heavy fine. "By his influence the gods were brought into contempt; it would be better, therefore, that "this most wicked Athanasius" were altogether banished from Egypt." To a supplication from the Christian inhabitants of the city in favour of Athanasius, he returned a sarcastic and contemptuous reply, reminding the people of Alexandria of their descent from Pagan ancestors, and of the greatness of the gods they worshipped, and expressing his astonishment that they should prefer the worship of Jesus, the Word of God, to that of the Sun, the glorious and visible and eternal emblem of the Deity.*

In other parts, justified perhaps in their former excesses, or encouraged to future acts of violence, by the impunity of the Alexandrians, Paganism awoke, if not to make reprisals by conversion, at least to take a bloody revenge on its Christian adversaries.† The atrocious persecutions of the fanatic populace, in some of the cities of Syria, have already been noticed. The aged Mark of Arethusa was, if not the most blameless, at least the victim of these cruelties, whose life ought to have been

CHAP. VI.

^{*} Julian. Epist. xi. p. 378. † Julian. Epist. x. p. 377.

III. Death of Mark of Arethusa.

BOOK

sanctified even by the rumour which ascribed the preservation of Julian, when an infant, to the pious bishop. Mark was accused of having destroyed a temple; he was summoned to rebuild it at his own expense. But Mark, with the virtues, inherited the primitive poverty of the Apostles; and, even if he had had the power, no doubt, would have resisted this demand. But the furious populace, according to Sozomen, men, women, and schoolboys, seized on the old man, and inflicted every torment which their inventive barbarity could suggest. The patience and calm temperament of the old man resisted and survived the cruelties.† Julian is said to have expressed no indignation, and ordered no punishment. The præfect Sallust reminded him of the disgrace to which Paganism was exposed, by being thus put to shame by a feeble old man.

Julian courts the Jews.

The policy of Julian induced him to seek out every alliance which could strengthen the cause of Paganism against Christianity. Polytheism courted an unnatural union with Judaism; their bond of connection was their common hatred to Christian. ity. It is not clear whether Julian was sufficiently acquainted with the writings of the Christians, distinctly to apprehend that they considered the final destruction of the Jewish temple to be one of the great prophecies on which their religion rested. The δὶ, Ισον εἰς ἀσίδειαν ἔφη, τὸ ὁδολὸν γοῦν ἕνα δοῦναι, τῷ πάντα δοῦναι. Ε. Η. iii. 7.

* According to Theodoret, 'O tailed account of this cruel scene, which was clearly a kind of popular tumult, which the authorities in no way interfered to repress.

[†] Sozomen gives the most de- E. H. v. 10.

rebuilding of that temple was bringing, as it were, this question to direct issue; it was an appeal to God, whether he had or had not finally rejected the people of Israel, and admitted the Christians to all their great and exclusive privileges. At all events, the elevation of Judaism was the depression of Christianity. It set the Old Testament, to which the Christians appealed, in direct and hostile opposition to the New.

The profound interest awakened in the Jewish mind showed that they embraced, with eager fervour, this solemn appeal to Heaven. With the joy which animated the Jew, at this unexpected summons to return to his native land, and to rebuild his fallen temple, mingled, no doubt, some natural feeling of triumph and of gratified animosity over In every part of the empire the the Christian. Jews awoke from their slumber of abasement and of despondency. It was not for them to repudiate the overtures of Paganism. The Emperor acknow- Deterledged their God, by the permission to build again rebuild the the temple to his glory; and, if not as the sole Jerusalem. and supreme God, yet his language affected a monotheistic tone, and they might indulge the fond hope that the re-establishment of the temple upon Mount Moriah might be preparatory to the final triumph of their faith, in the awe-struck veneration of the whole world; the commencement of the Messiah's kingdom; the dawn of their longdelayed, but, at length, approaching millennium of empire and of religious supremacy. Those who could not contribute their personal labour devoted their wealth to the national work. The extent their sacrifices, the eagerness of their hopes, rath belong to the province of Jewish history. every precaution was taken to secure the uninte rupted progress of the work. It was not an affa of the Jewish nation, but of the imperial gover It was entrusted to the ruler of the pr ment. vince, as the delegate of the Emperor. Funds we advanced from the public treasury; and, if the Jews themselves, of each sex and of every ag took pride in hallowing their own hands by assis ing in heaping up the holy earth, or hewing tl stone to be employed in this sacred design; if the wrought their wealth into tools of the precio metals, shovels and spades of silver, which were become valued heirlooms, as consecrated by th pious service, the Emperor seemed to take a de personal interest in the design, which was at once immortalise his magnificence, and to assist his oth glorious undertakings. The Jews, who acknow ledged that it was not lawful to offer sacrifice exce on that holy place, were to propitiate their Go during his expedition into Persia; and on I triumphant return from that region, he promise to unite with them in adoration in the restor city and in the reconstructed fane of the great Go of the Jews. *

BOOK

Judaism and Paganism had joined in this solen adjuration, as it were, of the Deity. Their vowere met with discomfiture and disappointmen

^{*} In his letter to the Jews, he in his Theologic Fragment (p.29) calls the God of the Jews, κρείττων; μίγας Θεός.

The simple fact of the interruption of their labours, by an event, which the mass of mankind could not but consider præternatural, even as recorded by the Inter-Pagan historians, appeared, in the more excited and rupted. imaginative minds of the Christians, a miracle of the most terrific and appalling nature. Few, if any, of the Christians could have been eye-witnesses The Christian world would have of the scene. averted its face in horror from the impious design. The relation must, in the first instance, have come from the fears of the discomfited and affrighted work-The main fact is indisputable, that, as they dug down to the foundations, terrific explosions took place; what seemed balls of fire burst forth; the works were shattered to pieces; clouds of smoke and dust enveloped the whole in darkness, broke only by the wild and fitful glare of the flames. Again the work was renewed by the obstinate zeal of the Jews; again they were repelled by this unseen and irresistible power, till they cast away their implements, and abandoned the work in humiliation and despair. How far natural causes, the ignition of the foul vapours, confined in the deeply excavated recesses of the hill of the temple, according to the recent theory, will account for the facts, as they are related in the simpler narrative of Marcellinus, may admit of some question; but the philosophy of the age, whether Heathen or Christian, was as unable as it was unwilling to trace such appalling events to the unvarying operations of nature. *

* See M. Guizot's note on Gib-bon, with my additional observ-distinction in point of credibility Christianity may have embellished this wonderful event, but Judaism and Paganism confessed by their terrors the prostration of their hopes. The work was abandoned; and the Christians of later ages could appeal to the remains of the shattered works and unfinished excavations, as the unanswerable sign of the divine wrath against their adversaries, as the public and miraculous declaration of God in favour of their insulted religion.

But it was not as Emperor alone that the indefatigable Julian laboured to overthrow the Christian religion. It was not by the public edict, the more partial favour shown to the adherents of Paganism, the insidious disparagement of Christianity, by the depression of its ministers and apostles, and the earnest elevation of Heathenism, to a moral code and an harmonious religion, with all the pomp of a sumptuous ritual; it was not in the council, or the camp, or the temple alone, that Julian stood forth as the avowed antagonist of Christianity. He was ambitious, as a writer, of confuting its principles and disproving its veracity: he passed in his closet the long nights of the winter, and con-

Writings of Julian.

between miracles addressed to the terror and those which appeal to the calmer emotions of the mind, such as most of those recorded in the Gospel. The former, in the first place, are usually momentary, or, if prolonged, endure but a short time. But the passion of fear so completely unlinges and disorders the mind, as to deprive it of all trustworthy power of observation or discrimination. In themselves, therefore, I should venture to conclude that terrific miracles, resting on human testimony, are less credible than those of a less appalling nature. Though the other class of emotions, those of joy or gratitude, or religious veneration, likewise disturb the equable and dispassionate state of mind requisite for cool reasoning, yet such miracles are in general both more calmly surveyed, and more permanent in their effects, tinued, during his Persian campaign, his elaborate work against the faith of Christ. He seemed, as it were, possessed with an equal hatred of those whom he considered the two most dangerous enemies of the Roman empire, the Persians and the Christians. While oppressed by all the serious cares of organising and moving such an army as might bring back the glorious days of Germanicus or of Trajan; while his ambition contemplated nothing less than the permanent humiliation of the great Eastern rival of the empire; his literary vanity found time for its exercise, and in all his visions of military glory and conquest, Julian never lost sight of his fame as an author.* It is difficult to judge from the fragments of this work, selected Work for confutation after his death by Cyril of Jeru- against Chrissalem, of the power, or even of the candour, shown tianity. by the imperial controversialist. But it appears to have been composed in a purely polemic spirit, with no lofty or comprehensive views of the real nature of the Christian religion, no fine and philosophic perception of that which in the new faith had so powerfully and irresistibly occupied the whole soul of man; with no consciousness of the utter inefficiency of the cold and incoherent Pagan mysticism, which he endeavoured to substitute for the Gospel.

But, at least, this was a grave and serious employment. Whatever might be thought of his success as a religious disputant, there was no loss of dignity in the Emperor condescending to enlighten his subjects on such momentous ques-But, when he stooped to be the satirist of the inhabitants of a city which had ridiculed his philosophy and rejected his religion, the finest and most elegant irony, the keenest and most delicate wit, would scarcely have justified this compromise of the imperial majesty. But, in the Misopogon — the apology for his philosophic beard — Julian mingled the coarseness of the Cynic with the bitterness of personal indignity. The vulgar ostentation of his own filthiness, the description of the vermin which peopled his thick beard, ill accord with the philosophic superiority with which Julian rallies the love of amusement and gaiety among his subjects of Antioch. Their follies were at least more graceful and humane than this rude pedantry. There is certainly much felicity of sarcasm, doubtless much justice, in his animadversions on the dissolute manners, the ingratitude for his liberality, the dislike of his severe justice. the insolence of their contempt for his ruder manners, throughout the Misopogon; but it lowers Julian from a follower of Plato, to a coarse imitator of Diogenes; it exhibits him as borrowing the worst part of the Christian monkish character. the disregard of the decencies and civilities of life. without the high and visionary enthusiasm, or the straining after superiority to the low cares and pursuits of the world. It was singular to hear a Grecian sophist, for such was undoubtedly the character of Julian's writings, extolling the barbarians, the Celts and Germans, above the polished inhabitants of CHAP. Greece and Syria.

^{*} Julianus Augustus septem li-bros in expeditione Parthicâ ad-nym. Oper. Epist. lxx.

BOOK III. Misopogon.

Paganism followed with faithful steps, and with Julian sets eager hopes, the career of Julian on the brilliant forth on his Persian exoutset of his Persian campaign. Some of the pedition. Syrian cities through which he passed, Batne and Hierapolis, and Carrhæ, seemed to enter into his views, and endeavoured, with incense and sacrifice, to propitiate the gods of Julian.* For the last time the Etruscan haruspices accompanied a Roman Emperor; but by a singular fatality, their adverse interpretation of the signs of heaven was disdained, and Julian followed the advice of the philosophers, who coloured their predictions with the bright hues of the Emperor's ambition,†

The death of Julian did greater honour to his Death of philosophy. We may reject as in itself improbable, and as resting on insufficient authority, the bitter sentence ascribed to him when he received his fatal "Thou hast conquered, O Galilean.;" He comforted his weeping friends; he expressed his readiness to pay the debt of nature, and his joy that the purer and better part of his being was so soon to be released from the gross and material body. "The gods of heaven sometimes bestow an early death as the best reward of the most pious." His conscience uttered no reproach; he had administered the empire with moderation, firmness and clemency; he had repressed the licence of [‡] Νενίκηκας, Γάλιλαιε. * Julian. Epist. xxvii. p. 399. doret, Hist. Eccl. iii. 25. Amm. Marc. xxii. 2. † Amm. Marc. xxiii. v.

and to the civil authority; nor yielded, without the disgrace and bitterness of failure. He who stands across the peaceful stream of progressive opinion, by his resistance maddens it to an irresistible torrent, and is either swept away by it at once, or diverts it over the whole region in one devastating deluge.*

 Theodoret describes the rejoicings at Antioch on the news of the death of Julian. There were not only festal dancings in the churches and the cemeteries καὶ τοῖς μαρτόρων σηκοῖς, ἀλλὰ καὶ of the martyrs, but in the theatres they celebrated the triumph of the cross, and mocked at his vatici μαρτεύμασιν ἐπετώθαζον. Ε. Η. iii. the churches and the cemeteries nations.

Η δὲ Αντιόχου πόλις τὴν ἐκείνοι μεμαθηκύια σφαγήν, δημοθοινίας Ιπετίλει και σανηγύρεις και ου μόνον εν ταϊς εκκλησίαις εχόρευον 27.

CHAP. VII.

CHAPTER VII.

VALENTINIAN AND VALENS.

It is singular to hear the Pagans taking up, in Lamenttheir altered position, the arguments of the Christians. The extinction of the family of Constantine at the death of Julian. was a manifest indication of the divine displeasure at the abandonment of Paganism. * But this was the calmer conclusion of less recent sorrow and The immediate expression of disappointment. Pagan regret was a bitter and reproachful complaint against the ingratitude of the gods, who made so bad a return for the zealous services of Julian. "Was this the reward for so many victims, so many prayers, so much incense, so much blood, shed on the altar, by night as well as by day. Julian, in his profuse and indiscriminate piety, had neglected no deity; he had worshipped all who lived in the tradition of the poets, - fathers and children, gods and goddesses, superior and subordinate deities; and they, instead of hurling their thunderbolts and lightnings, and all the armoury of Heaven, against the hostile Persians, had thus basely abandoned their sacred charge. The new Salmoneus, the more impious Lycurgus, the sense-

* Liban. pro Templis, ii. 184.

image of a man (such were the appellations with which the indignant rhetorician alluded to Constantius), who had waged implacable warfare with the gods, quenched the sacred fires, trampled on the altars, closed or demolished or profaned the temples, or alienated them to loose companions, this man had been permitted to pollute the earth for fifty years, and then departed by the ordinary course of nature; while Julian, with all his piety, and all his glory, had only given to the world a hasty glimpse of his greatness, and suddenly departed from their unsatisfied sight."* But, without regarding the vain lamentations of Paganism, Christianity calmly resumed its ascendancy. The short reign of Jovian sufficed for its re-establishment; and, as yet, it exacted no revenge for its sufferings and degradation under Julian.† The character of the two brothers who succeeded to the Valentinian empire, Valentinian and Valens, and their religious policy, were widely at variance. Valentinian ascended the throne with the fame of having rejected the favour of Julian, and the prospects of military and Valeus.

Roige of

* Libanius insults, in this passage, the worship of the dead man, whose sarcophagus (he seems to allude to the pix or consecrated box in which the sacramental symbol of our Saviour's body was enclosed) is introduced into the κληρος of the gods. Monod. in Julian. i. p. 509.

† Themistius praises highly the toleration of Jovian. "Thy law, and that of God, is eternal and unchangeable; that which leaves the soul of every man free to low that form of religion which seems best to him." Ad Jovian p. 81., ed. Dindorf. He pro ceeds to assert, that the genera piety will be increased by the rivalry of different religions. "The Deity does not demand uniformity of faith." He touches on the evil which had arisen out of religious factions, and urges him to permit supplications to ascend to Heaver from all parts of the empire for his prosperous reign. He praise him, however, for suppressing magic and Goetic sacrifices.

distinction, for the sake of his religion. He had withdrawn from the army rather than offer even questionable adoration to standards decorated with the symbols of idolatry. But Valentinian was content to respect those rights of conscience which he had so courageously asserted.

CHAP.

The Emperor of the West maintained a calm A. D. 364. and uninterrupted toleration, which incurred the of Valentireproach of indifference from the Christian party, but has received the respectful homage of the Pagan historian.* The immunities and the privileges of the Pagan priesthood were confirmed; the rites of divination were permitted, if performed without malicious intent.‡ The prohibition of midnight sacrifices, which seemed to be required by the public morals, threatened to deprive the Greeks of their cherished mysteries. Prætextatus, then proconsul of Achaia, the head of the Pagan party, a man of high and unblemished character, represented to the Emperor that these rites were necessary to the existence of the Greeks. The law was relaxed in their favour, on the condition of their strict adherence to ancient usage. In Rome, the vestal virgins maintained their sanctity; the altar of Victory, restored by Julian, preserved its place; a military guard protected the temples from insult, but a tolerant as well as prudent provision, forbade the employment of Christian soldiers on this service.§

^{*} Ammianus Marcellinus, l. xxx.

Testes sunt leges a me in exordio imperii mei datæ; quibus uni-cuique quod animo imbibisset, colendi libera facultas tributa est. Cod. Theod. l. ix. tit. 16. l. 9.

[†] Cod. Theod. xii. 1. 60. 75. ‡ Cod. Theod. ix. 16. 9. § Cod. Theod. xvi. 1. 1.

BOOK aws of alentiian.

On the other hand, Valentinian appears to have retracted some of the lavish endowments conferred by Julian on the Heathen temples. These estates were re-incorporated with the private treasure of the sovereign.* At a later period of his reign, there must have been some general prohibition of animal sacrifice; the Pagan worship was restricted to the offering of incense to the gods. † But, according to the expression of Libanius, they dared not execute this law in Rome, so fatal would it have been considered to the welfare of the empire. ‡ ns for ıgic.

Valens, in the East, as Valentinian, in the West, allowed perfect freedom to the public ritual of Paganism. But both in the East and in the West, the persecution against magic and unlawful divination told with tremendous force against the Pagan cause. It was the more fatal, because it was not openly directed against the religion, but against practices denounced as criminal, and believed to be real, by the general sentiment of mankind, and prosecuted by that fierce animosity which is engendered by fear. Some compassion might be felt for innocent victims, supposed to be unjustly implicated in such charges; the practice of extorting evidence or confession by torture, might be revolting, to those especially who looked back with pride and with envy to the boasted immunity of all Roman citizens from such cruelties; but where strong suspi-

^{*} Cod. Theod. x. 1. 8. The ed. Reiske. This arose out of law reads as if it were a more some recent and peculiar circumgeneral and indiscriminate confis- stances. cation.

⁺ Lib. pro Templis, vii. p. 163.,

[‡] Liban. vol. ii. p. 180.

CHAP. VII.

cion of guilt prevailed, the public feeling would ratify the stern sentence of the law against such delinquents; the magician or the witch would pass to execution amid the universal abhorrence. The notorious connection of any particular religious party with such dreaded and abominated proceedings, particularly if proved by the conviction of a considerable majority of the condemned from their ranks. would tend to depress the religion itself. sentiment was not altogether unjust. Paganism had, as it were, in its desperation, thrown itself upon the inextinguishable superstition of the human mind. The more the Pagans were depressed. the hope of regaining their lost superiority, the desire of vengeance, would induce them to seize on every method of awing or commanding the minds of their wavering votaries. Nor were those who condescended to these arts, or those who in many cases claimed the honours annexed to such fearful powers, only the bigoted priesthood, or mere itinerant traders in human credulity; the high philosophic party, which had gained such predominant influence during the reign of Julian, now wielded the terrors and incurred the penalties of these dark and forbidden practices. It is impossible to read their writings without remarking a boastful display of intercourse with supernatural agents, which to the Christian would appear an illicit communion with malignant spirits. This was not indeed magic, but it was the groundwork of it. The theurgy, or mysterious dealings of the Platonic philosopher with the dæmons or still higher powers, was separated by a thin and imperceptible distinction from Goetic or unlawful enchantment. Divination, indeed, or the foreknowledge of futurity by different arts, was an essential part of the Greek and Roman religion. But divination had, in Greece at least, withdrawn from its public office. retired from the silenced oracles of Delphi or Do-The gods, rebuked, according to the Christian, offended, according to the Pagan, had withdrawn their presence. In Rome the Etruscan soothsayers, as part of the great national ceremonial, maintained their place, and to a late period preserved their influence over the public mind. But, in general, it was only in secret, and to its peculiar favourites, that the summoned or spontaneous deity revealed the secrets of futurity; it was by the dream, or the private omen, the sign in the heavens, vouchsafed only to the initiate, or the direct inspiration; or, if risked, it was by the secret, mysterious, usually the nocturnal rite, that the reluctant God was compelled to disclose the course of fate.

VOL. III.

Cruelty of Valentinian. The persecutions of Valentinian in Rome were directed against magical ceremonies. The Pagans, who remembered the somewhat ostentatious lenity and patience of Julian on the public tribunal, might contrast the more than inexorable, the inquisitorial and sanguinary, justice of the Christian Valentinian, even in ordinary cases, with the benignant precepts of his religion. But justice with Valentinian, in all cases, more particularly in these persecutions, degenerated into savage tyranny. The Emperor kept two fierce bears by his own cham- CHAP. ber, to which the miserable criminals were thrown. in his presence, while the unrelenting Valentinian listened with ferocious delight to their groans. One of these animals, as a reward for his faithful service to the state, received his freedom, and was let loose into his native forest.*

Maximin, the representative of Valentinian at Trials in Rome be-Rome, administered the laws with all the vindictive fore Maxiferocity, but without the severe dignity, of his imperial master. Maximin was of an obscure and barbarian family, settled in Pannonia. He had attained the government of Corsica and Sardinia, and subsequently of Tuscany. He was promoted in Rome to the important office of superintendent of the markets of the city. During the illness of Olybius, the præfect of Rome, the supreme judicial authority had been delegated to Maximin. Maximin was himself rumoured to have dabbled in necromantic arts, and lived in constant terror of accusation till released by the death of his accomplice. This rumour may create a suspicion that Maximin was, at least at the time at which the accusation pointed, a Pagan. The Paganism of a large proportion of his victims is more evident. The first trial over which Maximin presided was a charge made by Chilon, vicar of the præfects, and tinian. In Milan, the place where would be worshipped as martyrs three obscure victims were buried, by the Christians. Amm. Marc. was called ad Innocentes, When he had condemned the decurions

* The Christians did not escape of three towns to be put to death, these legal murders, constantly perpetrated by the orders of Valen-execution, it was stated that they xxvii. 7.

his wife, Maximia, against three obscure persons for attempting their lives by magical arts: of these, one was a soothsayer.* Cruel tortures extorted from these miserable men a wild string of charges at once against persons of the highest rank and of the basest degree. All had tampered with unlawful arts, and mingled up with them the crimes of murder, poisoning, and adultery. A general charge of magic hung over the whole city. poured these dark rumours into the greedy ear of Valentinian, and obtained the authority which he coveted, for making a strict inquisition into these offences, for exacting evidence by torture from men of every rank and station, and for condemning them to a barbarous and ignominious death. crime of magic was declared of equal enormity with treason; the rights of Roman citizenship, and the special privileges granted by the imperial edicts, were suspended †; neither the person of senator nor dignitary was sacred against the scourge or the The powers of this extraordinary commission were exercised with the utmost latitude and most implacable severity. Anonymous accusations were received; Maximin was understood to have declared that no one should be esteemed innocent whom he chose to find guilty. But the details of this persecution belong to our history only as far as they relate to religion. On general grounds, it may be inferred, that the chief brunt of this sanguinary persecution fell on the Pagan party. Magic, although, even at that time, perhaps, the insatiate curiosity about the future, the indelible passion for supernatural excitement, even more criminal designs, might betray some few professed Christians into this direct treason against their religion, was a crime which, in general, would have been held in dread and abhorrence by the members of the church. In the laws it is invariably denounced as a Pagan crime. The aristocracy of Rome were the chief victims of Maximin's cruelty, and in this class, till its final extinction, was the stronghold of Paganism. It is not assuming too much influence to Connection the Christianity of that age, to consider the immo- of these crimes with ralities and crimes, the adulteries and the poisonings, Paganism. which were mingled up with these charges of magic, as the vestiges of the old unpurified Roman The Christianity of that period ran into the excess of monastic asceticism, for which the enthusiasm, to judge from the works of St. Jerom, was at its height; and this violation of nature had not yet produced its remote but apparently inevitable consequence — dissoluteness of morals. In almost every case recorded by the historian may be traced indications of Pagan religious usages. A soothsayer, as it has appeared, was involved in the first While his meaner accomplices criminal charge. were beaten to death by straps loaded with lead, the judge having bound himself by an oath that they should neither die by fire nor steel, the soothsayer, to whom he had made no such pledge, was burned The affair of Hymettius betrays the same connection with the ancient religion. Hymettius

^{*} Haruspex. + Juris prisci justitia et divorum arbitria. Amm. Marc.

BOOK III. had been accused, seemingly without justice, of ma versation in his office of proconsul of Africa, in tl supplies of corn to the metropolis. A celebrate soothsayer(haruspex), named Amantius, was charge with offering sacrifices, by the command of H mettius, with some unlawful or treasonable desig Amantius resisted the torture with unbroken co rage, but among his papers was found a writing Hymettius, of which one part contained bitter is vectives against the avaricious and cruel Vale tinian; the other implored him, by sacrifices, induce the gods to mitigate the anger of both tl Emperors. Amantius suffered capital punishmen A youth named Lollianus, convicted of inconside ately copying a book of magic incantations, ar condemned to exile, had the rashness to appeal the Emperor, and suffered death. Lollianus was the son of Lampadius, formerly præfect of Rome and, for his zeal for the restoration of the ancier buildings, and his vanity in causing his own nan to be inscribed on them, was called the Licher Lampadius, was probably a Pagan. The leader that party, Prætextatus, whose unimpeachable ch racter maintained the universal respect of all partie was the head of a deputation to the Emperor †, en treating him that the punishment might be propo tionate to the offences, and claiming for the sentorial order their immemorial exemption from th unusual and illegal application of torture. On th whole, this relentless and sanguinary inquisition into the crime of magic, enveloping in one dreadful proscription a large proportion of the higher orders of Rome and of the West, even if not directly, must, incidentally, have weakened the cause of Paganism; connected it in many minds with dark and hateful practices; and altogether increased the deepening animosity against it.

^{*} Tillemont thinks Lampadius † Amm. Marc. xxvii. 1. &c. to have been a Christian; but his reasons are to me inconclusive.

In the East, the fate of Paganism was still more In the adverse. There is strong ground for supposing East, rebellion that the rebellion of Procopius was connected with of Procopius. the revival of Julian's party. It was assiduously A. D. 365. rumoured abroad that Procopius had been designated as his successor by the expiring Julian. Procopius, before the soldiery, proclaimed himself the relative and heir of Julian.* The astrologers had predicted the elevation of Procopius to the greatest height - of empire, as his partisans fondly hoped, — of misery, as the ingenious seers expounded the meaning of their oracle after his death.† The Pagan and philosophic party were more directly and exclusively implicated in the fatal event, which was disclosed to the trembling Valens at Antioch, and brought as wide and relentless desolation on the East as the cruelty of A.D. 368. Maximin on the West. It was mingled up with treasonable designs against the throne and the life of the Emperor. The magical ceremony of divination, which was denounced before Valens, was ^{*} Amm. Marc. xxvi. 6. * τῆς συμφορᾶς γενέσθαι διασημότε-† See Le Beau, iii. p. 250. ρον. He was deceived by the "Ωστε αὐτὸν τῶν ἐπὶ ταῖς μεγίσταις Genethliaci. Greg. Nyss. de Fato. άρχαις γνωρισθέντων, έν τῷ μεγέθει

Pagan throughout all its dark and mysterious circumstances.* The tripod on which the conspirators performed their ill-omened rites was modelled after that at Delphi; it was consecrated by magic songs and frequent and daily ceremonies, according to the established ritual. The house where the rite was held was purified by incense; a kind of charger made of mixed metals was placed upon the altar, around the rim of which were letters at certain intervals. The officiating diviner wore the habit of a Heathen priest, the linen garments, sandals, and a fillet wreathed round his head, and held a sprig of an auspicious plant in his hand; he chanted the accustomed hymn to Apollo, the god of prophecy. The divination was performed by a ring running round on a slender thread and pointing to certain letters, which formed an oracle in heroic verse, like those of Delphi. The fatal prophecy then pointed to the three first and the last letters of a name, like Theodorus, as the fated successor of Valens.

Among the innumerable victims to the fears and the vengeance of Valens, whom the ordinary prisons were not capacious enough to contain, those who either were, or were suspected of having been entrusted with the fatal secret, were almost all the chiefs of the philosophic party. Hilary of Phrygia, with whom is associated, by one historian, Patricius of Lydia, and Andronicus of Caria, all men of the most prediction of the Gentile oracles. Των Έλληνικων χρηστηρίων. Lib. viii. c. 15.

* Philostorgius describes it as a by Libanius, which seems contrary to the general policy of the brothers, and was but partially carried into execution, may have been connected with these transactions.

I cannot but suspect that the prohibition of sacrifice mentioned profound learning*, and skilled in divination, were those who had been consulted on that unpardoned and unpardonable offence, the enquiring the name of the successor to the reigning sovereign. were, in fact, the conductors of the magic ceremony. and on their confession betrayed the secret circumstances of the incantation. Some, among whom appears the name of Iamblichus, escaped by miracle from torture and execution.† Libanius himself (it may be observed, as evidence how closely magic and philosophy were mingled up together in the popular opinion) had already escaped with difficulty two charges of unlawful practices; on this occasion, to the general surprise, he had the same good fortune: either the favour or the clemency of the Emperor, or some interest with the general accusers of his friends, exempted him from the common peril. Of those whose sufferings are recorded. Pasiphilus resisted the extremity of torture rather than give evidence against an innocent man: that man was Eutropius, who held the rank of proconsul of Asia. Simonides, though but a youth, was one of the most austere disciples of philosophy. He boldly admitted that he was cognisant of the dangerous secret, but he kept Simonides was judged worthy of a it undivulged. more barbarous death than the rest; he was condemned to be burned alive; and the martyr of philosophy calmly ascended the funeral pile. fate of Maximus, since the death of Julian, had ^{*} Zosimus, iv. 15.

CHAP. VII.

⁺ See Zonaras, 13, 2.

[†] Vit. i. 114.

been marked with strange vicissitude. With Priscus, on the accession of Valentinian, he was summoned before the imperial tribunal; the blameless Priscus was dismissed, but Maximus, who, according to his own friends, had displayed, during the life of Julian, a pomp and luxuriousness unseemly in a philosopher, was sent back to Ephesus and amerced in a heavy fine, utterly disproportioned to philosophic poverty. The fine was mitigated, but, in its diminished amount, exacted by cruel tortures. Maximus, in his agony, entreated his wife to purchase poison to rid him of his miserable life. wife obeyed, but insisted on taking the first draught: - she drank, expired, and Maximus - declined to drink. He was so fortunate as to attract the notice of Clearchus, proconsul of Asia; he was released from his bonds; rose in wealth and influence, returned to Constantinople; and resumed his former The fatal secret had been communicated to He had the wisdom, his partisans de-Maximus. clared the prophetic foresight, to discern the perilous consequences of the treason. He predicted the speedy death of himself and of all who were in possession of the secret. He added, it is said, a more wonderful oracle; that the Emperor himself would soon perish by a strange death, and not even find Maximus was apprehended and carried to burial. After a hasty trial, in which he confessed Antioch. his knowledge of the oracle, but declared that he esteemed it unworthy of a philosopher to divulge a secret entrusted to him by his friends, he was taken back to Ephesus, and there executed with all the rest of his party who were implicated in the CHAP. conspiracy. Festus, it is said, who presided over the execution, was haunted in after life by a vision of Maximus dragging him to judgment before the infernal deities.* Though a despiser of the gods, a Christian, he was compelled by his terrors to sacrifice to the Eumenides, the avengers of blood; and having so done, he fell down dead. So completely did the cause of the Pagan deities appear involved with that of the persecuted philosophers.

Nor was this persecution without considerable influence on the literature of Greece. severe an inquisition was instituted into the possession of magical books, that, in order to justify their sanguinary proceedings, vast heaps of manuscripts relating to law and general literature were publicly burned, as if they contained unlawful Many men of letters throughout the East, in their terror destroyed their whole libraries, lest some innocent or unsuspected work should be seized by the ignorant or malicious informer, and bring them unknowingly within the relentless penalties of the law.† From this period, philosophy is almost extinct, and Paganism, in the East, drags on its silent and inglorious existence, deprived of its literary aristocracy, and opposing only the inert resistance of habit to the triumphant energy of Christianity.

universos invaserat terror. xxix.2. Compare Heyne, note on Zosi-^{*} Eunap. Vit. Maxim. Amm. exurerent libraria omnia: tantus Marc. xxix. 1.

⁺ Amm. Marcell. xxix. 1. In-de factum est per Orientales provincias, ut omnes metu similium

State of Christianity in the East.

Arianism, under the influence of Valens, maintained its ascendancy in the East. Throughout the whole of that division of the empire, the two forms of Christianity still subsisted in irreconcileable hostility. Almost every city had two prelates, each at the head of his separate communion; the one. according to the powers or the numbers of his party, assuming the rank and title of the legitimate bishop, and looking down, though with jealous animosity, on his factious rival. During the life of Athanasius the see of Alexandria remained faithful to the Trinitarian doctrines. For a short period, indeed, the prelate was obliged to retire, during what is called his fifth exile, to the tomb of his father, but he was speedily welcomed back by the acclamations of his followers, and the baffled imperial authority acquiesced in his peaceful rule till But at his death, five years afterwards, his decease. were renewed the old scenes of discord and blood-Palladius, the præfect of Egypt, received the imperial commission to install the Arian prelate. Lucius, on the throne of Alexandria. Palladius was a Pagan, and the Catholic writers bitterly reproach their rivals with this monstrous alliance. It was rumoured that the Pagan population welcomed the Arian prelate with hymns of gratulation as the friend of the god Serapis, as the restorer

A.D. 375.

4. D. 370.

of his worship.

In Constantinople, Valens had received baptism from Eudoxus, the aged Arian prelate of that see. Sacerdotal influence once obtained over the feeble mind of Valens, was likely to carry him to any extreme; yet, on the other hand, he might be 'estrained and overawed by calm and dignified resistance. In general, therefore, he might yield himself up as an instrument to the passions, jealousies, and persecuting violence of his own party; while he might have recourse to violence to place Demophilus on the episcopal throne of Constantinople, he might be awed into a more tolerant and equitable tone by the eloquence and commanding cha-It is unjust to load the memory of racter of Basil. Valens with the most atrocious crime which has been charged upon him by the vindictive exaggeration of his triumphant religious adversaries. As a deputation of eighty Catholic ecclesiastics of Constantinople were returning from Nicomedia, the vessel was burned, the crew took to the boat, the ecclesiastics perished to a man. As no one escaped to tell the tale, and the crew, if accomplices, were not likely to accuse themselves, we may fairly doubt the assertion that orders had been secretly issued by Valens to perpetrate this wanton barbarity.

The memorable interview with Saint Basil, as it Interview is related by the Catholic party, displays, if the weakness, certainly the patience and toleration, of the sovereign — if the uncompromising firmness of the prelate, some of that leaven of pride with which he is taunted by Jerome.

During his circuit through the Asiatic provinces, he Emperor approached the city of Cæsarea in Modestus, the violent and unscru-Cappadocia. pulous favourite of Valens, was sent before, to persuade the bishop to submit to the religion of the CHAP.

Emperor. Basil was inflexible. "Know you not," said the offended officer, "that I have power to strip you of all your possessions, to banish you, to "He," answered Basil, deprive you of life?" "who possesses nothing can lose nothing; all you can take from me is the wretched garments I wear, and the few books, which are my only wealth. to exile, the earth is the Lord's; every where it will be my country, or rather my place of pilgrimage. Death will be a mercy; it will but admit me into life: long have I been dead to this world." destus expressed his surprise at this unusual tone "You have never, then," of intrepid address. replied the prelate, "conversed before with a bishop?" Modestus returned to his master. "Violence will be the only course with this man, who is neither to be appalled by menaces nor won by blandishments." But the Emperor shrunk from vio-His humbler supplication confined lent measures. itself to the admission of Arians into the communion of Basil; but he implored in vain. The Emperor mingled with the crowd of undistinguished worshippers; but he was so impressed by the solemnity of the Catholic service, the deep and full chanting of the psalms, the silent adoration of the people, the order and the majesty, by the calm dignity of the bishop and of his attendant clergy, which appeared more like the serenity of angels than the busy scene of mortal men, that, awe-struck and overpowered, he scarcely ventured to approach to make his offering. The clergy stood irresolute, whether they were to receive it from the infectious hand of an Arian; Basil, at length, while the trembling

Emperor leaned for support on an attendant priest, condescended to advance and accept the oblation. But neither supplications, nor bribes, nor threats, could induce the bishop to admit the sovereign to the communion. In a personal interview, instead of convincing the bishop, Valens was so overpowered by the eloquence of Basil, as to bestow an endowment on the church for the use of the poor. scene of mingled intrigue and asserted miracle ensued. The exile of Basil was determined, but the mind of Valens was alarmed by the dangerous illness of his son. The prayers of Basil were said to have restored the youth to life; but a short time after, having been baptized by Arian hands, he relapsed and died. Basil however maintained his place and dignity to the end.*

But the fate of Valens drew on; it was followed Effect of by the first permanent establishment of the barba- anity in mirians within the frontiers of the Roman empire. tigating the evils of Christianity now began to assume a new and im-barbarian portant function, that assimilation and union between the conquerors and the conquered, which prevented the total extinction of the Roman civilisation, and the oppression of Europe, by complete and almost hopeless barbarism. However Christianity might have disturbed the peace, and therefore, in some degree, the stability of the empire, by the religious factions which distracted the principal cities; however that foreign principle of celibacy, which had now become completely identified with it, by withdrawing so many active and invasion.

• Greg. Naz. Orat. xx.; Greg. Nyss. contra Eunom.; and the ecclesigntical historians in loco.

CHAP.

powerful minds into the cloister or the hermitage, may have diminished the civil energies, and even have impaired the military forces of the empire*, yet the enterprising and victorious religion amply repaid those injuries by its influence in remodelling the new state of society. If treacherous to the interests of the Roman empire, it was true to those of mankind. Throughout the whole process of the resettling of Europe and the other provinces of the empire, by the migratory tribes from the north and east, and the vast system of colonisation and conquest, which introduced one or more new races into every province, Christianity was the one common bond, the harmonising principle, which subdued to something like unity the adverse and conflicting elements of society. Christianity, no doubt, while it discharged this lofty mission, could not but undergo a great and desecrating change. It might repress, but could not altogether subdue, the advance of barbarism; it was constrained to accommodate itself to the spirit of the times; while struggling to counteract barbarism, itself became barbarised. at once much of its purity and its gentleness; it became splendid and imaginative, warlike, and at length chivalrous. When a country in a comparatively high state of civilisation is overrun by a foreign and martial horde, in numbers too great to

* Valens, perceiving the actual operation of this unwarlike dedication of so many able-bodied men to useless inactivity, attempted to correct the evil by law, and by the strong interference of the government. He invaded the monasteries and solitary hermitages of Egypt, and swept the monks by thousands into the ranks of his army. But a reluctant Egyptian monk would, in general, make but an indifferent soldier.

be absorbed by the local population, the conquerors usually establish themselves as a kind of armed aristocracy, while the conquered are depressed into a race of slaves. Where there is no connecting, no intermediate power, the two races co-exist in stern and irreconcileable hostility. The difference in privilege, and often in the territorial possession of the land, is increased and rendered more strongly marked by the total want of communion in blood. Intermarriages, if not, as commonly, prohibited by law, are almost entirely discountenanced by general opinion. Such was, in fact, the ordinary process in the formation of the society which arose out of the ruins of the Roman empire. querors became usually a military aristocracy; assumed the property in the conquered lands, or, at least, a considerable share in the landed estates, and laid the groundwork, as it were, for that feudal system which was afterwards developed with more or less completeness in different countries of Europe.

One thing alone in some cases, tempered, during Influence the process of conquest, the irreclaimable hostility; of the clergy. in all, after the final settlement, moulded up together in some degree the adverse powers. as in the Gothic invasion, it had made some previous impression on the invading race, tianity was constantly present, silently mitigating the horrors of the war, and afterwards blending together, at least to a certain extent, the rival races. At all times, it became the connecting link, the intermediate power, which gave some community of interest, some similarity of feeling, to the master They worshipped at least the same and the slave. God, in the same church; and the care of the same clergy embraced both with something of an harmonising and equalising superintendence. Christian clergy occupied a singular position in this At the earlier period, they new state of society. were, in general, Roman; later, though sometimes barbarian by birth, they were Roman in educa-When the prostration of the conquered people was complete, there was still an order of people, not strictly belonging to either race, which maintained a commanding attitude, and possessed certain authority. The Christian bishop confronted the barbarian sovereign, or took his rank among the leading nobles. During the invasion, the Christian clergy, though their possessions were ravaged in the indiscriminate warfare; though their persons were not always secure from insult, or from slavery; yet, on the whole, retained, or very soon resumed, a certain sanctity, and hastened, before long, to wind their chains around the minds of the conquerors. Before a new invasion, Christianity had, in general, mingled up the invaders with the invaded; till at length Europe, instead of being a number of disconnected kingdoms, hostile in race, in civil polity, in religion, was united in a kind of federal Christian republic, on a principle of unity, acknowledging the supremacy of the Pope.

VOL. III.

Their importance in this new state of things.

The overweening authority claimed and exercised by the clergy; their existence as a separate and exclusive caste, at this particular period in the progress of civilisation, became of the highest CHAP. A religion without a powerful and separate sacerdotal order, even, perhaps, if that order had not in general been bound to celibacy, and so prevented from degenerating into an hereditary caste, would have been absorbed and lost in the conflict and confusion of the times. Religion, unless invested by general opinion in high authority, and that authority asserted by an active and incorporated class, would scarcely have struggled through this complete disorganisation of all the existing relations of society. The respect which the clergy maintained was increased by their being almost the exclusive possessors of that learning which commands the reverence even of barbarians, when not actually engaged in war. A religion which rests on a written record, however that record may be but rarely studied, and by a few only of its professed interpreters, enforces the general respect to literary Though the traditional commentary attainment. may overload or supersede the original book, the commentary itself is necessarily committed to writing, and becomes another subject of honoured and laborious study. All other kinds of literature, as Influence far as they survive, gladly rank themselves under of Christianity on the protection of that which commands reverence literature, The cloister or the for its religious authority. religious foundation thus became the place of refuge to all that remained of letters or of arts. Knowledge brooded in secret, though almost with unproductive, yet with life-sustaining warmth, over these secluded treasures. But it was not merely an inert and quiescent resistance which was thus offered to barbarism; it was perpetually extending its encroachments, as well as maintaining its place. Perhaps the degree to which the Roman language modified the Teutonic tongues may be a fair example of the extent to which the Roman civilisation generally modified the manners and the laws of the Northern nations.

on language,

The language of the conquered people lived in the religious ritual. Throughout the rapid succession of invaders who passed over Europe, seeking their final settlement, some in the remotest province of Africa, before the formation of other dialects, the Latin was kept alive as the language of Western Christianity. The clergy were its conservators, the Vulgate Bible and the offices of the church its depositaries, unviolated by any barbarous interruption, respected as the oracles of divine truth. the constant repetition of this language in the ears of the mingled people can scarcely have been without influence, in increasing and strengthening the Roman element in the common language, which gradually grew up from mutual intercourse, intermarriage, and all the other bonds of community which blended together the various races.

on the municipal institutions. The old municipal institutions of the empire probably owed their permanence, in no inconsiderable degree, to Christianity. It has been observed in what manner the decurionate, the municipal authorities of each town, through the extraordinary and oppressive system of taxation, from guardians of the liberties of the people, became mere passive and unwilling agents of the government. Responsible for payments which they could not exact, men of opulence, men of humanity, shrunk from the public offices. From objects of honourable ambition, they had become burdens, loaded with unrepaid unpopularity, assumed by compulsion, and exercised with reluctance. The defensors, instituted by Valentinian and Valens, however they might afford temporary protection and relief to the lower orders, scarcely exercised any long or lasting influence on the state of society. Yet the municipal authorities at least retained the power of administering the laws; and, as the law became more and more impregnated with Christian sentiment, it assumed something of a religious as well as civil authority. The magistrate became, as it were, an ally of the Christian bishop; the institutions had a sacred character, besides that of their general utility. Whatever remained of commerce and of art subsisted chiefly among the old Roman population of the cities, which was already Christian; and hence, perhaps, the guilds and fraternities of the trades, which may be traced up to an early period, gradually assumed a sort of religious bond of union. In all points, the Roman civilisation and Christianity, when the latter had completely pervaded the various orders of men, began to make common cause: and during all the time that this disorganisation of conquest and new settlement was taking place in this groundwork of the Roman social system, and the loose elements of society were severing by gradual disunion, a new confederative

CHAP. VII. BOOK 111. principle arose in these smaller aggregations, as well as in the general population of the empire. The church became another centre of union. Men incorporated themselves together, not only, nor so much, as fellow-citizens, as fellow-Christians. They submitted to an authority co-ordinate with the civil power, and united as members of the same religious fraternity.

on general habits.

Christianity, to a certain degree, changed the general habits of men. For a time, at least, they were less public, more private and domestic men. The tendency of Christianity, while the Christians composed a separate and distinct community, to withdraw men from public affairs; their less frequent attendance on the courts of law, which were superseded by their own peculiar arbitration; their repugnance to the ordinary amusements, which soon however, in the large cities, such as Antioch and Constantinople, wore off - all these principles of disunion ceased to operate when Christianity became the dominant, and at length the exclusive, religion. The Christian community became the people; the shows, the pomps, the ceremonial of the religion, replaced the former seasons of periodical popular excitement; the amusements, which were not extirpated by the change of sentiment, some theatrical exhibitions and the chariot race, were crowded with Christian spectators, Christians ascended the tribunals of law; not only the spirit and language of the New Testament, but likewise of the Old, entered both into the Roman jurisprudence and into the various barbarian codes, in which the Roman law was mingled with the old Teutonic usages. Thus Christianity was perpetually discharging the double office of conservator, with regard to the social institutions with which she had entered into alliance; and of mediator between the conflicting races which she was gathering together under her own wing. Where the relation between the foreign conqueror and the conquered inhabitant of the empire was that of master and slave, the Roman ecclesiastic still maintained his independence, and speedily regained his authority; he only admitted the barbarian into his order on the condition that he became to a certain degree Romanised; and there can be no doubt that the gentle influence of Christian charity and humanity was not without its effect in mitigating the lot, or at least in consoling the misery of the change from independence, or superiority, to humiliation and servitude. Where the two races mingled, as seems to have been the case in some of the towns and cities, on more equal terms, by strengthening the municipal institutions with something of a religious character, and by its own powerful federative principle, it condensed them much more speedily into one people, and assimilated their manners, habits, and usages.

Christianity had early, as it were, prepared the Early way for this amalgamation of the Goths with the Christianity among Roman empire. In their first inroads, during the the Goths. reign of Gallienus, when they ravaged a large part of the Roman empire, they carried away numbers of slaves, especially from Asia Minor and Cappa-Among these were many Christians. docia.

Ulphilas's version of the Scriptures.

slaves subdued the conquerors; the gentle doctrines of Christianity made their way to the hearts of the barbarous warriors. The families of the slaves continued to supply the priesthood to this growing community. A Gothic bishop*, with a Greek name, Theophilus, attended at the council of Nice; Ulphilas, at the time of the invasion in the reign of Valens, consecrated bishop of the Goths during an embassy to Constantinople, was of Cappadocian descent.† Among the Goths, Christianity first assumed its new office, the advancement of general civilisation, as well as of purer religion. It is difficult to suppose that the art of writing was altogether unknown to the Goths before the time of Ulphilas. The language seems to have attained a high degree of artificial perfection before it was employed by that prelate in the translation of the Scriptures.‡ Still the Mæso-Gothic alphabet, of which the Greek is by far the principal element, was generally adopted by the Goths. § It was universally disseminated; it was perpetuated, until the extinction or absorption of the Gothic race in

* Philostorgius, ii. 5.

† Socrates, ii. 41.

† The Gothic of Ulphilas is the link between the East and Europe, the transition state from the Sanscrit to the modern Teutonic languages. It is possible that the Goths, after their migration from the East to the north of Germany, may have lost the art of writing, partly from the want of materials. The German forests

The German forests ord no substitute for the sof the East; they may reduced to the barbarous runcs of the other Heathen tribes. Compare Bopp., Conjugations System.

§ The Mæso-Gothic alphabet has twenty-five letters, of which fifteen are evidently Greek, eight Latin. The two, th and hw, to which the Greek and Latin have no corresponding sound, are derived from some other quarter. They are most likely ancient characters. The th resembles closely the runic letter, which expresses the same sound. See St. Martin, note on Le Beau, iii. p. 120.

other tribes, by the translation of the sacred writ- CHAP. This was the work of Ulphilas, who, in his version of the Scriptures*, is reported to have omitted, with a Christian, but vain, precaution, the books of Kings, lest, being too congenial to the spirit of his countrymen, they should inflame their warlike enthusiasm. Whether the genuine mildness of Christianity, or some patriotic reverence for the Roman empire, from which he drew his descent, influenced the pious bishop, the martial ardour of the Goths was not the less fatal to the stability of the Roman empire. Christianity did not even mitigate the violence of the shock with which, for the first time, a whole host of Northern barbarians was thrown upon the empire, never again to be This Gothic invasion, which first shaken off. established a Teutonic nation within the frontier of the empire, was conducted with all the ferocity, provoked, indeed, on the part of the Romans by the basest treachery, of hostile races with no bond of connection.†

* The greater part of the frag-ments of Ulphilas's version of the Scriptures now extant is contained in the celebrated Codex Argenteus, now at Upsala. This splendid MS., written in silver letters, on parchment of a purple ground, contains almost the writer forms George & Knittel in 1769 four Gospels. Knittel, in 1762, discovered five chapters of St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, in a Palinpsest MS. at Wolfenbuttel. The best edition of the whole of this is by J. Christ. Zahn. Weissenfels, 1805. Since that time, M. Mai has published, from Milan Palinpsests, several other fragments, chiefly of the other Epistles of St. Paul. Milan, 1819. St. Martin, notes to Le Beau, iii. 100. On the Gothic translation of the Scriptures. See Socrat. iv. 33. Sozom. vi. 37. Philostor-gius, ii. 5. Compare Theodoret,

† It is remarkable to find a Christian priest employed as an ambassador between the Goths and the Romans, and either the willing or undesigning instrument of that stratagem of the Gothic general which was so fatal to Valens. Amm. Marc. xxxi. 12.

CHAPTER VIII.

THEODOSIUS. ABOLITION OF PAGANISM.

THE fate of Valens summoned to the empire a sovereign not merely qualified to infuse a conservative vigour into the civil and military administration of the empire, but to compress into one uniform system the religion of the Roman world. It was necessary that Christianity should acquire a complete predominance, and that it should be consolidated into one vigorous and harmonious system. The relegation, as it were, of Arianism among the Goths and other barbarous tribes, though it might thereby gain a temporary accession of strength, did not permanently impede the final triumph of Trinitarian-While the imperial power was thus lending its strongest aid for the complete triumph and concentration of Christianity, from the peculiar character of the mind of Theodosius, the sacerdotal order, on the strength and unity of which was to rest the permanent influence of Christianity during the approaching centuries of darkness, assumed new energy. A religious emperor, under certain circumstances, might have been the most dangerous adversary of the priestly power; he would have asserted with vigour, which could not at that time be resisted, the supremacy of the civil authority. But the weaknesses, the vices, of the great Theodosius, bowed him down before the aspiring priesthood, who, in asserting and advancing their own authority, were asserting the cause of humanity. The passionate tyrant, at the feet of the Christian prelate, deploring the rash resentment which had condemned a whole city to massacre; the prelate exacting the severest penance for the outrage on justice and on humanity, stand in extraordinary contrast with the older Cæsars, without remonstrance or without humiliation, glutting their lusts or their resentment with the misery and blood of their subjects.

The accession of Theodosius was hailed with A. D. 879. universal enthusiasm throughout the empire. pressing fears of barbaric invasion on every frontier silenced for a time the jealousies of Christian and Pagan, of Arian and Trinitarian. On the shore of each of the great rivers which bounded the empire, appeared a host of menacing invaders. The Persians, the Armenians, the Iberians, were prepared to pass the Euphrates or the eastern frontier; the Danube had already afforded a passage to the Goths; behind them were the Huns in still more formidable and multiplying swarms; the Franks and the rest of the German nations were crowding to the Rhine. Paganism, as well as Christianity, hastened to pay its grateful homage to the deliverer of the empire; the eloquent Themistius addressed the Emperor in the name of the imperial city; Libanius ventured to call on the Christian Emperor to revenge the death of Julian, that crime for which the gods were exacting just retribution; Pagan poetry awoke from its long silence; the glory of Theodosius and his family inspired its last noble effort in the verse of Claudian.

CHAP. VIII.

Theodosius was a Spaniard. In that province Christianity had probably found less resistance from the feeble provincial Paganism; nor was there, as in Gaul, an old national religion which lingered in the minds of the native population. Christianity was early and permanently established in the Pe-To Theodosius, who was but slightly tinged with the love of letters, or the tastes of a more liberal education, the colossal temples of the East, or the more graceful and harmonious fabrics of Europe, would probably create no feeling but that of aversion from the shrines of idolatry. His Christianity was pure from any of the old Pagan associations; unsoftened, it may, perhaps, be said, by any feeling for art, and unawed by any reverence for the ancient religion of Rome: he was a soldier, a provincial, an hereditary Christian of a simple and unquestioning faith; and he added to all this the consciousness of consummate vigour and ability, and a choleric and vehement temperament.

Spain, throughout the Trinitarian controversy, perhaps from the commanding influence of Hosius, had firmly adhered to the Athanasian doctrines. The Manichean tenets, for which Priscillian and his followers suffered (the first heretics condemned to death for their opinions), were but recently introduced into the province.

Thus, by character and education, deeply impressed with Christianity, and that of a severe and uncompromising orthodoxy, Theodosius undertook the sacred obligation of extirpating Paganism, and restoring to Christianity its severe and inviolable unity. Without tracing the succession of events throughout his reign, we may survey the Christian Emperor in his acts; first, as commencing, if not completing, the forcible extermination of Paganism: secondly, as confirming Christianity, and extending the authority of the sacerdotal order; and thirdly. as establishing the uniform orthodoxy of the Western Roman church.

CHAP.

The laws of Theodosius against the Pagan sacri- Hostility of fices grew insensibly more and more severe. inspection of the entrails of victims, and magic rites, were made a capital offence. In 391, issued an edict prohibiting sacrifices, and even the entering into the temples. In the same year, a rescript was addressed to the court and præfect of Egypt, fining the governors of provinces who should enter a temple, fifteen pounds of gold, and giving a kind of authority to the subordinate officers to prevent their superiors from committing such offences. The same year, all unlawful sacrifices are prohibited by night or day, within or without the temples. In 392, all immolation is prohibited under the penalty of death, and all other acts of idolatry under forfeiture of the house or land in which the offence shall have been committed.*

The Pagan temples, left standing in all their majesty, but desecrated, deserted, overgrown, would have been the most splendid monument to the triumph of Christianity. If, with the disdain of conscious strength, she had allowed them to remain without victim, without priest, without worshipper, but uninjured, and only exposed to natural decay from time and neglect, posterity would not merely have been grateful for the preservation of such stupendous and graceful models of art, but would have been strongly impressed with admiration of her magnanimity. But such magnanimity was neither to be expected from the age or the state of the religion. The Christians believed in the existence of the Heathen deities, with, perhaps, more undoubting faith than the Heathens them-The dæmons who inhabited the temples were spirits of malignant and pernicious power, which it was no less the interest than the duty of the Christian to expel from their proud and attractive mansions. * The temples were the strongholds of the vigilant and active adversaries of Christian truth and Christian purity, the enemies of God and man. The idols, it is true, were but wood and stone, but the beings they represented were real: they hovered, perhaps, in the air: they were still present in the consecrated spot, though rebuked and controlled by the mightier name of Christ, yet able to surprise the careless Christian in his hour of supineness or negligent adherence to his faith or his duty. When zeal inflamed the Christian populace to aggression upon any of these ancient and ime-hallowed buildings, no doubt some latent awe ingered within; something of the suspense of loubtful warfare watched the issue of the strife. However they might have worked themselves up to the conviction that their ancient gods were but of this inferior and hostile nature, they would still be haunted by some apprehensions, lest they should not be secure of the protection of Christ, or of the angels and saints in the new tutelar hierarchy of The old deities might not have been so completely rebuked and controlled as not to retain some power of injuring their rebellious votaries. It was at last, even to the faithful, a conflict between two unequal supernatural agencies, unequal indeed, particularly where the faith of the Christian was fervent and sincere, yet dependent for its event on the confidence of that faith, which sometimes trembled at its own insufficiency, and feared lest it should be abandoned by the divine support in the noment of strife.

• Cod. Theod. xvi. 10.7.11, 12.

^{*} Dii enim Gentium dæmonia, ut Scriptura docet. Ambros. Epist. Resp. ad Symmach. in init.

Throughout the East and West, the monks were the chief actors in this holy warfare. They are constantly spoken of by the Heathen writers in terms of the bitterest reproach and contempt. The most particular accounts of their proceedings relate to the East. Their desultory attacks were chiefly confined to the country, where the numberless shrines, images, and smaller temples were at the same time less protected, and more dear to the feelings of the people. In the towns, the larger fanes, if less guarded by the reverence of their worshippers, were under the protection of the municipal police.* Christianity was long almost exclusively the religion of the towns; and the term Paganism (notwithstanding the difficulties which embarrass this explanation) appears to owe its origin to this general distinction. The agricultural population, liable to frequent vicissitudes, trembled to offend the gods, on whom depended the plenty or the failure of the harvest. Habits are more intimately enwoven with the whole being in the regular labours of husbandry, than in the more various and changeable occupations of the city. The whole Heathen ritual was bound up with the course of agriculture: this was the oldest part both of the Grecian and Italian worship, and had experienced less change from the spirit of the times. In every field, in every garden, stood a deity; shrines and lesser temples were erected in every grove, by every fountain. drought, the mildew, the murrain, the locusts, whatever was destructive to the harvest or to the herd, was in the power of these capricious deitiest; even when converted to Christianity, the peasant trembled at the consequences of his own apostasy: and it is probable, that not until the whole of this race of tutelary deities had been gradually replaced by what we must call the inferior divinities of Paganising Christianity, saints, martyrs, and angels, that Christianity was extensively or permanently established in the rural districts, 1

CHAP. VIII.

Τολμάται μέν οὔν κἄν ταῖς πόλεσι, τὸ πολὸ τὲ εν τοῖς ἀγροῖς. Liban. pro Templis.

⁺ Καὶ τοῖς γεωργοῦσιν ἐν αὐτοῖς αι έλπίδες, υσαι περί τε ανδρών και γυναικών, καὶ τέκνων καὶ βοών, καὶ τῆς σπειρομένης γῆς καὶ πεφοτευ-μένης. Liban. de Templ. ‡ This difference prevailed equally in the West. Fleury gives

During the reign of Constantine, that first sign of a decaying religion, the alienation of the property attached to its maintenance, began to be dis- Alienation cerned. Some estates belonging to the temples of the revenue of were seized by the first Christian Emperor, and the temappropriated to the building of Constantinople. The favourites of his successor, as we have seen. were enriched by the donation of other sacred estates, and even of the temples themselves.* Julian restored the greater part of these prodigal gifts, but they were once more resumed under Valentinian, and the estates escheated to the imperial revenue. Soon after the accession of Theodosius, the Pagans, particularly in the East, saw the storm gathering in the horizon. The monks, with perfect impunity, traversed the rural districts, demolishing all the unprotected edifices. In vain did the Pagans appeal to the episcopal authority; the bishops declined to repress the over-active, perhaps, but pious zeal of their adherents. Already much destruction had taken place among the smaller rural shrines; the temples in Antioch, of Fortune, of Jove, of Athene, of Dionysus, were still standing; but the demolition of one stately temple, either at Edessa or Palmyra, and this under the an account of the martyrdom of ing to Libanius, with no more three missionaries by the rural population of a district in the Tyrol, who resented the abolition of their deities and their religious ceremonies. Hist. Eccles. v. 64. • They were bestowed, accord- p. 185.

respect than a horse, a slave, a dog, or a golden cup. The position of the slave between the horse and the dog, as cheap gifts, is curious enough. Liban. Op. v. ii.

BOOK III. Oration of Libenius.

pretext of the imperial authority, had awakened all the fears of the Pagans. Libanius addressed an elaborate oration to the Emperor, "For the Temples." Like Christianity under the Antonines, Paganism is now making its apology for its public worship. Paganism is reduced to still lower humiliation; one of its modest arguments against the destruction of its temples, is an appeal to the taste and love of splendour, in favour of buildings at least as ornamental to the cities as the imperial palaces.† The orator even stoops to suggest that, if alienated from religious uses, and let for profane purposes, they might be a productive source of revenue. eloquence and arguments of Libanius were wasted on deaf and unheeding ears. The war against the temples commenced in Syria; but it was not conducted with complete success. In many cities the inhabitants rose in defence of their sacred buildings, and, with the Persian on the frontier, a religious war might have endangered the allegiance of these provinces. The splendid temples, of which the ruins have recently been discovered, at Petrat. were defended by the zealous worshippers; and in those, as well as at Areopolis and Raphia, in Palestine, the Pagan ceremonial continued without dis-In Gaza, the temple of the tutelar turbance. deity, Marnas, the lord of men, was closed; but the Christians did not venture to violate it.

Syrian temples destroyed.

^{*} This oration was probably not delivered in the presence of Theodosius.

[†] Liban. pro Templis, p. 190. ‡ Laborde's Journey. In most of these buildings Roman architecture of the age of the Antonines is manifest, raised in general on the enormous substructions of much earlier ages.

form of some of the Syrian edifices allowed their CHAP. transformation into Christian churches; they were enclosed, and made to admit sufficient light for the services of the church. A temple at Damascus, and another at Heliopolis or Baalbec*, were consecrated to the Christian worship. Marcellus of Apamea was the martyr in this holy warfare. had signalised himself by the destruction of the temples in his own city, particularly that of Jupiter, whose solid foundations defied the artificers and soldiery employed in the work of demolition. and required the aid of miracle to undermine them. But, on an expedition into the district of Apamea, called the Aulon, the rude inhabitants rose in defence of their sacred edifice, seized Marcellus, and burned him alive. The synod of the province refused to revenge on his barbarous enemies, a death so happy for Marcellus, and so glorious for his family.t

The work of demolition was not long content with these less famous edifices, these outworks of Paganism; it aspired to attack one of its strongest citadels, and, by the public destruction of one of the most celebrated temples in the world, to announce that Polytheism had for ever lost its hold upon the minds of men.

It was considered the highest praise of the mag-

Sun, the work of successive ages, pose. it is probable that a Christian + Sozo church was enclosed in some part ret, v. 21.

If this (as indeed is not like- of its precincts. The sanctuary ly) was the vast Temple of the was usually taken for this pur-

⁺ Sozomen, vii. 15. Theodo-

BOOK III. Temple of Serapis at Alexandria.

nificent temple in Edessa, of which the roof was of remarkable construction, and which contained in its secret sanctuary certain very celebrated statues of wrought iron, and whose fall had excited the indignant eloquence of Libanius, to compare it to the Serapion in Alexandria. The Serapion, at that time, appeared secure in the superstition, which connected its invoilable sanctity, and the honour of its god*, with the rise and fall of the Nile, with the fertility and existence of Egypt, and, as Egypt was the granary of the East, of Constantinople. The Pagans had little apprehension that the Serapion itself, before many years, would be levelled to the ground.

A. D. 389, or 391.

The temple of Serapis, next to that of Jupiter in the Capitol, was the proudest monument of Pagan religious architecture.† Like the more celebrated structures of the East, and that of Jerusalem in its glory, it comprehended within its precincts a vast mass of buildings, of which the temple itself formed It was built on an artificial hill, in the the centre. old quarter of the city, called Rhacotis, to which the ascent was by a hundred steps. All the substructure was vaulted over; and in these dark chambers, which communicated with each other, were supposed to be carried on the most fearful, and, to the Christian, abominable mysteries. around the spacious level platform were the habitations of the priests, and the ascetics dedicated to † Post Capitolium, quo se venerabilis Roma in æternum attollit

^{*} Libanius expresses himself to nihil orbis terrarum ambitiosius this effect. ccrnat. Ammian. Marcell. xxii. † Post Capitolium, quo se ve-

the worship of the god. Within these outworks of this city, rather than temple, was a square, surrounded on all sides with a magnificent portico. In the centre arose the temple, on pillars of enormous magnitude and beautiful proportion. The work either of Alexander himself or of the first Ptolemy, aspired to unite the colossal grandeur of Egyptian with the fine harmony of Grecian art. The god himself was the especial object of adoration throughout the whole country, and throughout every part of the empire into which the Egyptian worship had penetrated*, but more particularly in Alexandria; and the wise policy of the Ptolemys had blended together, under this pliant and all-embracing religion, the different races of their subjects. Egyptian Worship of and Greek met as worshippers of Serapis. Serapis of Egypt was said to have been worshipped for ages at Sinope; he was transported from that city with great pomp and splendour, to be reincorporated, as it were, and reidentified with his ancient While the Egyptians worshipped in Serapis the great vivific principle of the universe, the fecundating Nile, holding the Nilometer for his sceptre, the Lord of Amen-ti, the President of the regions beyond the grave; the Greeks, at the same time, recognised the blended attributes of their Dionysus, Helios, Æsculapius, and Hades.†

CHAP.

 In Egypt alone he had fortytwo temples; innumerable others in every part of the Roman em-pire. Aristid. Orat. in Canop.

+ This appears to me the most natural interpretation of the celebrated passage in Tacitus. Compare De Guigniaut, Le Dieu Serapis et son Origine, originally written as a note for Bournouf's Translation of Tacitus.

BOOK III. Statue of Serapis,

The colossal statue of Serapis embodied these It filled the sanctuary: its various attributes.* outstretched and all-embracing arms touched the walls; the right the one, the left the other. was said to have been the work of Sesostris; it was made of all the metals fused together, gold, silver, copper, iron, lead, and tin; it was inlaid with all kinds of precious stones; the whole was polished, and appeared of an azure colour. The measure or bushel, the emblem of productiveness or plenty, crowned its head. By its side stood the symbolic three-headed animal, one the forepart of a lion, one of a dog, one of a wolf. In this the Greeks saw the type of their poetic Cerberus.† The serpent, the symbol of eternity, wound round the whole, and returned resting its head on the hand of the god.

The more completely the adoration of Serapis had absorbed the worship of the whole Egyptian pantheon, the more eagerly Christianity desired to triumph over the representative of Polytheism. However, in the time of Hadrian, the philosophic party may have endeavoured to blend and harmonise the two faiths ‡, they stood now in their old direct and irreconcileable opposition. The suppression of the internal feuds between the opposite

^{*} The statue is described by Macrobius, Saturn. i 20.; Clemens Alexandrin. Exhortat. ad Gent. i. p. 42.; Rufinus, E. H. xii. 23.

[†] According to the interpretation of Macrobius, the three heads represented the past, the present, and the future; the rapacious wolf the past, the central lion the intermediate present, the fawning dog the hopeful future.

[‡] See the Letter of Hadrian, Vol. II. p. 155.

parties in Alexandria, enabled Christianity to direct all its concentred force against Paganism. Theo. philus, the archbishop, was a man of boldness and The first activity, eager to seize, and skilful to avail himself Paganism. of, every opportunity to inflame the popular mind against the Heathens. A priest of Serapis was accused and convicted of practising those licentious designs against the virtue of the female worshippers, so frequently attributed to the priesthood of the Eastern religions. The noblest and most beautiful women were persuaded to submit to the embraces of the god, whose place, under the favourable darkness caused by the sudden extinction of the lamps in the temple, was filled by the priest. inauspicious rumours prepared the inevitable col-A neglected temple of Osiris or Dionysus had been granted by Constantius to the Arians of Theophilus obtained from the Em-Alexandria. peror a grant of the vacant site, for a new church, to accommodate the increasing numbers of the Catholic Christians. On digging the foundation, there were discovered many of the obscene symbols, used in the Bacchic or Osirian mysteries. philus, with more regard to the success of his cause than to decency, exposed these ludicrous or disgusting objects, in the public market place, to the contempt and abhorrence of the people. Pagans, indignant at this treatment of their sacred symbols, and maddened by the scorn and ridicule of the Christians, took up arms. The streets ran with blood; and many Christians who fell in this tumultuous fray received the honours of martyr-

BOOK III. Olympus the philosopher. dom. A philosopher, named Olympus, placed himself at the head of the Pagan party. had foreseen and predicted the ruin of the external worship of Polytheism. He had endeavoured to implant a profound feeling in the hearts of the Pagans which might survive the destruction of their ordinary objects of worship. "The statues of the gods are but perishable and material images; the eternal intelligences, which dwelt within them, have withdrawn to the heavens." * Yet Olympus hoped, and at first with his impassioned eloquence succeeded, in rousing his Pagan compatriots to a bold defiance of the public authorities in support of their religion; faction and rivalry supplied what was wanting to faith, and it appeared that Paganism would likewise boast its army of martyrs, -martyrs, not indeed through patient submission to the persecutor, but in heroic despair perishing with their gods.

War in the city.

The Pagans at first were the aggressors; they sallied from their fortress, the Serapion, seized the unhappy Christians whom they met, forced them to sacrifice on their altar, or slew them upon it, or threw them into the deep trench defiled with the blood and offal of sacrifice. In vain Evagrius, the præfect of Egypt, and Romanus, the commander of the troops, appeared before the gates of the Temple, remonstrated with the garrison, who appeared at the windows, against their barbarities, and menaced them with the just vengeance of the CHAP. They were obliged to withdraw, baffled and disregarded, and to await the orders of the Emperor. Olympus exhorted his followers to the height of religious heroism. "Having made a glorious sacrifice of our enemies, let us immolate ourselves and perish with our gods." But before the rescript arrived, Olympus had disappeared: he had stolen Flight of out of the Temple, and embarked for Italy. The Olympus, Christian writers do honour to his sagacity, or to his prophetic powers, at the expense of his courage and fidelity to his party. In the dead of night, when all was slumbering around, and all the gates closed, he had heard the Christian Alleluia pealing from a single voice through the silent Temple. He acknowledged the sign, or the omen, and anticipated the unfavourable sentence of the Emperor, the fate of his faction and of his gods.

^{* &}quot;Υλην φθαρτήν καὶ ἰνδάλματα μεις δε τινας ἐνοικήσαι αὐτοῖς, καὶ λέγων είναι τὰ ἀγάλματα, καὶ διὰ είς οὐρανὸν ἀποπτήναι. Sozom. τοῦτο ἀφανισμὸν ὑπομένειν δυνά- Η. Ε. vii. 15.

The eastern Pagans, it should seem, were little acquainted with the real character of Theodosius. When the rescript arrived they laid down their arms, and assembled in peaceful array before the Temple, as if they expected the sentence of the Emperor in their own favour.* The officer began; Rescript the first words of the rescript plainly intimated the dosius. abhorrence of Theodosius against idolatry. Cries of triumph from the Christians interrupted the proceedings; the panic-stricken Pagans, abandoning exhorting the Emperor to revenge the death of Julian, was really presented to Theodosius, it betrays something of the same ignorance. He seems to think his tate.

* If the oration of Libanius, arguments not unlikely to meet their temple and their god, silently dispersed; they sought out the most secret places of refuge; they fled their country. Two of the celebrated pontiffs, one of Amoun, one of "the Ape," retired to Constantinople, where the one, Ammonius, taught in a school, and continued to deplore the fall of Paganism; Helladius, the other, was known to boast the part he had taken in the sedition of Alexandria, in which, with his own hand, he had slain nine Christians.*

BOOK

The imperial rescript at once went beyond and fell short of the fears of the Pagans. It disdained to exact vengeance for the blood of the Christian martyrs, who had been so happy as to lay down their lives for their Redeemer; but it commanded the destruction of the idolatrous temples; it confiscated all the ornaments, and ordered the statues to be melted or broken up for the benefit of the poor.

The temple assailed.

Theophilus hastened in his triumphant zeal to execute the ordinance of the Emperor. Marching, with the præfect at the head of the military, they ascended the steps to the temple of Serapis. surveyed the vacant chambers of the priests and the ascetics; they paused to pillage the library †; they entered the deserted sanctuary; they stood in the presence of the god. The sight of this co-

Helladius is mentioned in a law of Theodosius the younger, as a ^{*} Socrat. Eccl. Hist. v. 16. and thirty years after this transaction.

⁺ Nos vidimus armaria librocelebrated grammarian elevated to rum; quibus direptis, exinanita certain honours. This law is, ea a nostris hominibus, nostris however, dated 425; at least five temporibus memorant. Oros. vi.15.

lossal image, for centuries an object of worship, struck awe to the hearts of the Christians themselves. . They stood silent, inactive, trembling. The arch- The statue. bishop alone maintained his courage: he commanded a soldier to proceed to the assault. soldier struck the statue with his hatchet on the The blow echoed through the breathless hall, but no sound or sign of Divine vengeance ensued; the roof of the Temple fell not to crush the sacrilegious assailant, nor did the pavement heave and quake beneath his feet. The emboldened soldier climbed up to the head and struck it off; it rolled upon the ground. Serapis gave no sign of life, but a large colony of rats, disturbed in their peaceful abode, ran about on all sides. The passions of the multitude are always in extremes. From breathless awe they passed at once to ungovernable The work of destruction went on amid peals of laughter, coarse jests, and shouts of acclamation; and as the fragments of the huge body of Serapis were dragged through the streets, the Pagans, with that revulsion of feeling common to the superstitious populace, joined in the insult and mockery against their unresisting and self-abandoned god.*

* They were said to have discovered several of the tricks by which the priests of Serapis imposed on the credulity of their worshippers. An aperture of the wall was so contrived, that the ight of the sun, at a particular time, fell on the face of Serapis.

Scrapis; and at the moment of their meeting, the flashing light threw a smile on the lips of the Deity. There is another story of a magnet on the roof, which, as in the fable about Mahomet's coffin, raised either a small statue of the Deity, or the sun in a car with The sun was then thought to visit four horses, to the roof, and there

The solid walls and deep foundations of the Temple offered more unsurmountable resistance to the baffled zeal of the Christians; the work of demolition proceeded but slowly with the massive architecture*; and some time after a church was erected in the precincts, to look down upon the ruins of idolatry, which still frowned in desolate grandeur upon their conquerors.†

Yet the Christians, even after their complete triumph, were not without some lingering terrors; the Pagans not without hopes that a fearful vengeance would be exacted from the land for this sacrilegious extirpation of their ancient deities. Serapis was either the Nile, or the deity who presided over the periodical inundations of the river. The Nilometer, which measured the rise of the waters, was kept in the Temple. Would the indignant river refuse its fertilising moisture; keep sullenly within its banks, and leave the ungrateful land blasted with perpetual drought and barrenness? As the time of the inundation approached, all Egypt was in a state of trembling suspense. Long beyond the accustomed day the waters remained at their usual level; there was no sign of overflowing. The people began to murmur; the murmurs swelled into indignant remonstrances; discovering the cross in various parts of the building; they were inclined to suppose it miraculous or prophetic of their triumph. But, in fact, the crux ansata is a common hieroglyphic, a symbol of life.

held it suspended. A Christian withdrew the magnet, and the car fell, and was dashed to pieces on the pavement.

^{*} Compare Eunap. Vit. Ædesii, p. 44. edit. Boissonade.

[†] The Christians rejoiced in the usual rites and sacrifices were demanded from the reluctant præfect, who despatched a hasty messenger to the Emperor for instructions. There was every appearance of a general insurrection; the Pagans triumphed in their turn; but before the answer of the Emperor arrived, which replied, in uncompromising faith, "that if the inundation of the river could only be obtained by magic and impious rites, let it remain dry; the fertility of Egypt must not be purchased by an act of infidelity to God.*" Suddenly, the waters began to swell, an inundation more full and extensive than usual spread over the land, and the versatile Pagans had now no course but to join again with the Christains in mockeries against the impotence of their gods.

But Christianity was not content with the demolition of the Serapion; its predominance throughout Egypt may be estimated by the bitter complaint of the Pagan writer: "Whoever wore a black dress (the monks are designated by this description) was invested in tyrannical power; philosophy and piety to the gods were compelled to retire into secret places, and to dwell in contented poverty and dignified meanness of appearance. The temples were turned into tombs for the adoration of the bones of the basest and most depraved of men, who had suffered the penalty of the law,

* Improbable as it may seem, that such an answer should be given by a statesman like Theodosius, yet it is strongly charac-favour, and to force from them teristic of the times. The Em-the retarded overflow of the river. peror neither denies the power of the malignant dæmons worshipped by the idolaters, nor the efficacy of enchantments, to obtain their whom they made their gods."* Such was the light in which the martyr-worship of the Christians appeared to the Pagans.

The demolition of the Serapion was a penalty inflicted on the Pagans of Alexandria for their sedition and sanguinary violence; but the example was too encouraging, the hope of impunity under the present government too confident, not to spread through other cities of Egypt. To Canopus, where the principle of humidity was worshipped in the form of a vase, with a human head, Theophilus, who considered Canopus within his diocese, marched at the head of his triumphant party, demolished the temples, abolished the rites, which were distinguished for their dissolute licence, and established monasteries in the place. Canopus, from a city of revel and debauchery, became a city of monks.t

The persecution extended throughout Egypt; but the vast buildings which even now subsist, the successive works of the Pharaohs, the Ptolemies, and the Roman Emperors, having triumphed alike over time, Christianity, and Mahommedanism, show either some reverent reluctance to deprive the country of its most magnificent ornaments, or the inefficiency of the instruments which they employed in the work of devastation. For once it was less easy for men to destroy than to preserve; the power of ^{*} Eunap. Vit. Ædesii, loc. cit. † The Christians laughed at Canopus being called "the conqueror of the gods." The origin of this name was, that the principle of fire, the god of the Chaldeans, had been extinguished by the water within the statue of Canopus, the principle of humidity.

demolition was rebuked before the strength and solidity of these erections of primeval art.

CHAP.

The war, as we have seen, raged with the same partial and imperfect success in Syria; with less, probably, in Asia Minor; least of all in Greece. The demolition was no where general or systematic. Wherever monastic Christianity was completely predominant, there emulous zeal excited the laity to these aggressions on Paganism. But in Greece the noblest buildings of antiquity, at Olympia, Eleusis, Athens*, show in their decay the slower process of neglect and time, of accident and the gradual encroachment of later barbarism, rather than the iconoclastic destructiveness of early religious zeal.†

In the West, the task of St. Martin of Tours, the great extirpator of idolatry in Gaul, was comparatively easy, and his achievements by no means so much to be lamented, as those of the destroyers of the purer models of architecture in the East. The life of this saint, of which the comparatively polished and classical style singularly contrasts with the strange and legendary incidents which it relates, describes St. Martin as making regular campaigns into all the region, destroying, wherever he could, the shrines and temples of the Heathen, and replacing them by churches and monasteries.

^{*} The Parthenon, it is well known, was entire, till towards the close of the sixteenth century. Its roof was destroyed during the siege by the Venetians. See Spon. and Wheler's Travels.

[†] The council of Illiberis refused the honours of martyrdom to those who were killed while breaking idols. Can. lx.

BOOK IIL So completely was his excited imagination full of his work, that he declared that Satan often assumed the visible form of Jove, of Mercury, of Venus, or of Minerva, to divert him, no doubt, from his holy design, and to protect their trembling fanes.*

Paganism at Rome.

But the power and the majesty of Paganism were still concentered at Rome; the deities of the ancient faith found their last refuge in the capital of the empire. To the stranger, Rome still offered the appearance of a Pagan city: it contained one hundred and fifty-two temples, and one hundred and eighty smaller chapels or shrines, still sacred to their tutelary God, and used for public worship.† Christianity had neither ventured to usurp those few buildings which might be converted to her use, still less had she the power to destroy them. The religious edifices were under the protection of the præfect of the city, and the præfect was usually a Pagan; at all events, he would not permit any breach of the public peace, or violation of public property. Above all still towered the Capitol, in its unassailed and awful majesty, with its fifty temples or shrines, bearing the most sacred names in the religious and civil annals of Rome, those of Jove, of Mars, of Janus, of Romulus, of Cæsar, Some years after the accession of of Victory.

tion du Paganisme en Occident. M. Beugnot has made out, on more or less satisfactory evidence, a list of the deities still worshipped in Italy. t. i. l. viii. c. 9. St. Augustin, when young, was present at the rites of Cybele, about A.D. 374.

[•] Sulpic. Sever. Vit. B. Martini, p. 469.

[†] See the Descriptiones Urbis, which bear the names of Publicus Victor, and Sextus Rufus Festus. These works could not have been written before or long after the reign of Valentinian. Compare Beugnot, Histoire de la Destruc-

Theodosius to the Eastern empire, the sacrifices CHAP. were still performed as national rites at the public cost; the pontiffs made their offerings in the name of the whole human race. The Pagan orator ventures to assert that the Emperor dared not to endanger the safety of the empire by their abolition.* The Emperor still bore the title and insignia of the supreme Pontiff; the consuls before they entered upon their functions, ascended the Capitol; the religious processions passed along the crowded streets; and the people thronged to the festivals and theatres, which still formed part of the Pagan worship.

But the edifice had begun to tremble to its Gratian, foundations. The Emperor had ceased to reside A. D. 367.

at Rome; his mind, as well that of Gratian, and II., the younger Valentinian, as of Theodosius, was A. D. 375.
Theodosius, free from those early inculcated and daily renewed A. D. 379. impressions of the majesty of the ancient Paganism which still enthralled the minds of the Roman aristocracy. Of that aristocracy, the flower and the pride was Vettius Agorius Prætextatus.† him the wisdom of Pagan philosophy blended with the serious piety of Pagan religion: he lived to witness the commencement of the last fatal change, which he had no power to avert; he died, and his death was deplored as a public calamity, in time to escape the final extinction, or rather degradation, of Paganism. But eight years before the fatal ac- A. D. 876.

^{*} Liban. pro Templis. † See on Prætextatus, Macrob. Saturn. i. 2. Symmachi Epistolæ, i. 40. 43. 45., ii. 7. 31. 36. 53. 59. Hieronym. Epistolæ, xxiii.

cession of Gratian, and the year of his own death, he had publicly consecrated twelve statues, in the Capitol, with all becoming splendour, to the Dii curantes, the great guardian deities of Rome.* was not only the ancient religion of Rome which still maintained some part of its dignity, all the other religions of the empire, which still publicly celebrated their rites, and retained their temples in the metropolis, concentred all their honours on Prætextatus, and took refuge, as it were, under the protection of his blameless and venerable name. His titles in an extant inscription announce him as having attained, besides the countless honours of Roman civil and religious dignity, the highest rank in the Eleusinian, Phrygian, Syrian, and Mithriac mysteries.† His wife boasted the same religious titles; she was the priestess of the same mysteries, with the addition of some peculiar to the female sex.‡ She celebrated the funeral, even the apotheosis, of her noble husband with the utmost pomp: he was the last Pagan, probably, who received the honours of deification. All Rome crowded, in sorrow and profound reverence, to the ceremony. In the language of the vehement Jerom there is a singular mixture of enforced respect and of aver-

A. D.384.

* This appears from an inscription recently discovered (A. D. 1835), and published in the Buletino of the Archæological Society of Rome. Compare Bunsen, Roms Beschreibung, vol. iii. p. 9.

† Augur. Pontifex Vestæ, Pontifex Solis, Quindecimvir, Curialis Herculis, sacratus Libero et Eleusiniis, Hierophanta, Neocorus, Tauroboliatus, Pater Patrum. Gruter, p. 1102. No. 2.

† Sacratæ apud Eleusinam Deo Baccho, Cereri, et Coræ, apud Lernam, Deo Libero, et Cereri, et Coræ, sacratæ apud Æginam Deabus; Taurobolitæ, Isiacæ, Hierophantiæ Deæ Hecatæ, sacratæ Deæ Cereris. Gruter, 309.

sion; he describes (to moralise at the awful change) CHAP. the former triumphant ascent of the Capitol by Prætextatus amid the acclamations of the whole city; he admits the popularity of his life, but condemns him, without remorse, to eternal misery.*

Up to the accession of Gratian, the Christian A. D. 367. Emperor had assumed, as a matter of course, the Augustus. supremacy over the religion, as well as the state, A.D. 378. of Rome. He had been formally arrayed in the robes of the sovereign Pontiff. For the first few years of his reign, Gratian maintained the inag- Gratian regressive policy of his father.† But the masculine fuses the pontificate. mind of Ambrose obtained, and indeed had deserved by his public services, the supremacy over the feeble youth; and his influence began to reveal itself in a succession of acts, which plainly showed that the fate of Paganism drew near. When Gratian was in Gaul, the senate of Rome remembered that he had not been officially arrayed in the dignity of the supreme Pontificate. A solemn deputation from Rome attended to perform the customary ceremo- A. D. 3822 nial. The idolatrous honour was disdainfully rejected. The event was heard in Rome with consternation; it was the first overt act of separation between the religious and the civil power of the latio ut uxor mentitur infelix, sed in sordentibus tenebris continetur. Hieronym. Epist. xxiii. vol. i. p. 135.

* O quanta rerum mutatio! Ille quem ante paucos dies dignitatum omnium culmina præcede-bant, qui quasi de subjectis hos-tibus triumpharet, Capitolinas ascendit arces; quem plausu quodam et tripudio populus Romanus excepit,ad cujus intentum urbsuniversa commota est,—nunc desolatus et nudus. * * * non in lacteo cœli pa- Valens, A. D. 378.

+ M. Beugnot considers that Gratian was tolerant of Paganism from his accession, A.D. 367 to 382. He was sixteen when he ascended the throne, and became the first Augustus on the death of empire.* The next hostile measure was still more unexpected. Notwithstanding the manifest authority assumed by Christianity, and by one of the Christian prelates, best qualified, by his own determined character, to wield at his will the weak and irresolute Gratian; notwithstanding the long ill-suppressed murmurs, and now bold and authoritative remonstrances, against all toleration, all connivance at Heathen idolatry, it might have been thought that any other victim would have been chosen from the synod of Gods: that all other statues would have been thrown prostrate, all other worship proscribed, before that of Victory. Constantius, though he had calmly surveyed the other monuments of Roman superstition, admired their majesty, read the inscriptions over the porticos of the temples, had nevertheless given orders for the removal of this statue, and this alone,—its removal, it may be suspected not without some superstitious reverence, to the rival capital.† Victory had been restored by Julian to the Senate-house at Rome, where she had so long presided over the counsels of the conquering republic, and of the empire. She had maintained her place during the reign of Valentinian. The decree, that the statue of Victory was to be ignominiously dragged from its pedestal in the Senate-house, that the altar was to be removed.

Statue of Victory.

^{*} Zosimus, iv. 36. The date of this transaction is conjectural. The opinion of La Bastie, Mém. des Inscrip. xv. 141., is followed.

[†] Constantius (the whole account of this transaction is vague and uncircumstantial), acting in the spirit of his father, who collected a great number of the best statues to adorn the new capital, perhaps intended to transplant Victory to Constantinople.

and the act of public worship, with which the Se- CHAP. nate had for centuries of uninterrupted prosperity and glory commenced and hallowed its proceedings A. D. 382. discontinued, fell, like a thunderbolt, among the partisans of the ancient worship. Surprise yielded to indignation. By the advice of Prætextatus, a solemn deputation was sent to remonstrate with the Em-The Christian party in the Senate were strong enough to forward, through the Bishop Damasus, a counter-petition, declaring their resolution to abstain from attendance in the Senate so long as it should be defiled by an idolatrous ceremonial. Gratian coldly dismissed the deputation, though headed by the eloquent Symmachus, as not representing the unanimous sentiments of the Senate.*

This first open aggression on the Paganism of Rome was followed by a law which confiscated at once all the property of the temples, and swept away the privileges and immunities of the priesthood. The fate of the vestal virgins excited the strongest commiseration. They now passed unhonoured through the streets. The violence done to this institution, coeval with Rome itself, was aggravated by the bitter mockery of the Christians at the importance attached to those few and rare instances of chastity by the Pagans. They scoffed were passed in 383 and 391, against those qui ex Christianis Pagani facti sunt; qui ad Paganos persons of the right of bequeathing their property. Similar laws Theodos. xvi. 7. 1, 2. 4, 5.

* It is very singular that, even at this very time, severe laws seem to have been necessary to punish apostates from Christianity. In ritus cultusque migrarunt; qui 381, Theodosius deprived such venerabili religione neglectà ad

at the small number of the sacred virgins; at the occasional delinquencies (for it is singular that almost the last act of Pagan pontifical authority was the capital punishment of an unchaste vestal); the privilege they possessed, and sometimes claimed, of marriage, after a certain period of service, when, according to the severer Christians, such unholy desires should have been long extinct. If the state is to reward virginity (said the vehement Ambrose), the claims of the Christians would exhaust the treasury.

By this confiscation of the sacerdotal property, which had hitherto maintained the priesthood in opulence, the temples and the sacrificial rites in splendour, the Pagan hierarchy became stipendiaries of the state, the immediate step to their total dissolution. The public funds were still charged with a certain expenditure the maintenance of the public ceremonies. This was not abrogated till after Theodosius had again united the whole empire under his conquering sway, and shared with Christianity the subjugated world.

In the interval, Heathenism made perhaps more than one desperate though feeble struggle for the ascendancy. Gratian was murdered in the year 383. Valentinian II. succeeded to the sole empire of the West. The celebrated Symmachus became

* Prudentius, though he wrote later, expresses this sentiment:—
Nubit anus veterana, sacro perfuncta labore, Desertisque focis, quibus est famulata juventus,
Transfert invitas ad fulcra jugalia rugas,
Discit et in gelido nova nupta calescere lecto.

Adv. Symm. lib. ii.

+ This was called the Annona.

præfect of Rome. Symmachus commanded the respect, and even deserved the common attachment, of all his countrymen; he ventured (a rare example in those days) to interfere between the tyranny of the sovereign and the menaced welfare of the people. An uncorrupt magistrate, he deprecated the increasing burdens of unnecessary taxes, which weighed down the people; he dared to suggest that the eager petitions for office should be at once rejected, and the worthiest chosen out of the unpretending multitude. Symmachus inseparably connected, in his Pagan patriotism, the ancient religion with the welfare of Rome. He mourned in bitter humiliation over the acts of Gratian; the removal of the statue of Victory; the abrogation of the immunities of the Pagan priesthood: he hoped to obtain from the justice, or perhaps the fears, of the young Valentinian, that which had been refused by Gratian. The senate met under his authority; a petition was drawn up and presented in the name of that venerable body to the Emperor. In this composition Symmachus lavished all his eloquence. His oration is written with vigour, with dignity, with elegance. It is in this respect, perhaps, superior to the reply of Saint Ambrose.* But in Apology of Symmathe feeble and apologetic tone, we perceive at once, chus.

Heyne has expressed himself strongly on the superiority of Symmachus. Argumentorum delectu, vi, pondere, aculeis, non minùs admirabilis illa est quam prudentià, cautione, ac verecundià; quam tanto magis sentias si ver-bosam et inanem, interdum calumniosam et veteratoriam declamationem Ambrosii compares. Censur. ingen. et mor. Q. A. Symmachi, in Heyne Opuscul.

The relative position of the parties influenced, no doubt, the style, and will, perhaps, the judgment, of posterity on the merit of the compositions.

that it is the artful defence of an almost hopeless cause; it is cautious to timidity; dexterous; elaborately conciliatory; moderate from fear of offending, rather than from tranquil dignity. Ambrose, on the other hand, writes with all the fervid and careless energy of one confident in his cause, and who knows that he is appealing to an audience already pledged by their own passions to his side; he has not to obviate objections, to reconcile difficulties, to sue or to propitiate; his contemptuous and criminating language has only to inflame zeal, to quicken resentment and scorn. He is flowing down on the full tide of human passion, and his impulse but accelerates and strengthens the rapid current.

The personification of Rome, in the address of Symmachus, is a bold stroke of artificial rhetoric, but it is artificial; and Rome pleads instead of commanding; intreats for indulgence, rather than menaces for neglect. "Most excellent Princes. Fathers of your country, respect my years, and permit me still to practise the religion of my ancestors, in which I have grown old. Grant me but the liberty of living according to my ancient usage. This religion has subdued the world to my dominion; these rites repelled Hannibal from my walls, the Gauls from the Capitol. Have I lived thus long, to be rebuked in my old age for my religion. It is too late; it would be discreditable to amend I intreat but peace for the gods of in my old age. Rome, the tutelary gods of our country." Rome condescends to that plea, which a prosperous religion neither uses nor admits, but to which a falling faith always clings with desperate energy. "Heaven is above us all; we cannot all follow the same path; there are many ways by which we arrive at But we presume not to contend. the great secret. we are humble suppliants!" The end of the third century had witnessed the persecutions of Dioclesian; the fourth had not elapsed when this is the language of Paganism, uttered in her strongest hold by the most earnest and eloquent of her partisans. Symmachus remonstrates against the miserable economy of saving the maintenance of the vestal virgins; the disgrace of enriching the imperial treasury by such gains; he protests against the confiscation of all legacies bequeathed to them by the piety of individuals. "Slaves may inherit: the vestal virgins alone, and the ministers of religion, are precluded from this common privilege." The orator concludes by appealing to the deified father of the Emperor, who looks down with sorrow from the starry citadel, to see that toleration violated which he had maintained with willing justice.

But Ambrose was at hand to confront the elo- Reply of quent Pagan, and to prohibit the fatal concession. Far different is the tone and manner of the Archbishop of Milan. He asserts, in plain terms, the unquestionable obligation of a Christian sovereign to permit no part of the public revenue to be devoted to the maintenance of idolatry. Their Roman ancestors were to be treated with reverence: but in a question of religion, they were to consider God alone. He who advises such grants as those demanded by the suppliants is guilty of sacrifice.

Foiled in argument, Paganism vainly grasped at CHAP. other arms, which she had as little power to wield. On the murder of Valentinian, Arbogastes the Murder of Gaul, whose authority over the troops was without valentinian, competitor, hesitated to assume the purple, which A. D. 392. had never yet been polluted by a barbarian. placed Eugenius, a rhetorician, on the throne. The elevation of Eugenius was an act of military vio- Accession of Eugenius lence; but the Pagans of the West hailed his acces-nius. sion with the most eager joy and the fondest hopes. The Christian writers denounce the apostasy of Eugenius not without justice, if Eugenius ever professed Christianity.* Throughout Italy the temples were re-opened; the smoke of sacrifice ascended from all quarters; the entrails of victims were explored for the signs of victory. The frontiers were guarded by all the terrors of the old religion. The statue of Jupiter the Thunderer, sanctified by magic rites of the most awful significance, and placed on the fortifications amid the Julian Alps, looked defiance on the advance of the Christian Emperor. The images of the gods were unrolled on the banners, and Hercules was borne in triumph at the head of the army. Ambrose fled from Milan, for the soldiery boasted that they would stable their horses in the churches, and press the clergy to fill their legions.

In Rome, Eugenius consented, without reluctance, to the restoration of the altar of Victory, but

* Compare the letter of Ambrose but one in the hands of more to Eugenius. He addresses Eugenius apparently as a Christian, powerful Pagans.

he had the wisdom to foresee the danger which his cause might incur, by the resumption of the temple estates, many of which had been granted away: he yielded with undisguised unwillingness to the irresistible importunities of Arbogastes and Flavianus.

While this reaction was taking place in the West, perhaps irritated by the intelligence of this formidable conspiracy of Paganism, with the usurpation of the throne, Theodosius published in the East the last and most peremptory of those edicts which, gradually rising in the sternness of their language, proclaimed the ancient worship a treasonable and capital crime. In its minute and searching phrases it seemed eagerly to pursue Paganism to its most secret and private lurking-places. Thenceforth no man of any station, rank, or dignity, in any place in any city, was to offer an innocent victim in sacrifice; the more harmless worship of the household gods, which lingered, probably, more deeply in the hearts of the Pagans than any other part of their system, not merely by the smoke of victims, but by lamps, incense, and garlands, was equally forbidden. To sacrifice, or to consult the entrails of victims, was constituted high treason, and thereby a capital offence, although with no treasonable intention of calculating the days of the Emperor. crime of sufficient magnitude, to infringe the laws of nature, to pry into the secrets of futurity, or to inquire concerning the death of any one. ever permitted any Heathen rite - hanging a tree with chaplets, or raised an altar of turf - forfeited the estate on which the offence was committed. Any house profaned with the smoke of incense was confiscated to the imperial exchequer. Who- A. D. 894. ever violated this prohibition, and offered sacrifice either in a public temple, or on the estate of another. was amerced in a fine of twenty-five pounds of gold (a thousand pounds of our money); and whoever connived at the offence was liable to the same fine: the magistrate who neglected to enforce it, to a still heavier penalty.* This law, stern and intolerant as it was, spoke, no doubt, the dominant sentiment of the Christian world; but its repetition by the successors of Theodosius, and the employment of avowed Pagans in many of the high offices of the state and army, may permit us charitably to doubt whether the exchequer was much enriched by the forfeitures, or the sword of the executioner stained with the blood of conscientious Pagans. Polytheism boasted of no martyrs, and we may still hope that if called upon to carry its own decrees into effect, its native clemency - though, unhappily, Christian bigotry had already tasted of heretical blood-would have revolted from the sanguinary deed ‡, and yet have seen the inconsistency of these acts (which it justified in theory, on the supplicium est." Epist. xciii. But passages amiably inconsistent with this fierce tone might be quoted on the other side. Compare Editor's note on Gibbon, v. p. 114.

* Cod. Theod. xvi. 10. 12.

‡ Quis eorum comprehensus est in sacrificio (cum his legibus ista prohiberentur) et non negavit. Augustin, in Psalm cxx., quoted authority of the Old Testament), with the vital principles of the Gospel.

[†] Gibbon has quoted from Le Clerc a fearful sentence of St. Augustine, adressed to the Donatists. "Quis nostrum, quis vestrûm non laudat leges ab Imperatoribus datas adversus sacrificia Paganorum? Et certè longè ibi œna severior constituta est; illius quippe impietatis capitale by Gibbon from Lardner.

The victory of Theodosius in the West dissipated at once the vain hopes of Paganism; the pageant vanished away. Rome heard of the triumph, perhaps witnessed the presence of the great conqueror, who, in the East, had already countenanced the most destructive attacks against the temples of the gods. The Christian poet describes a solemn debate of the Senate on the claims of Jupiter and of Christ to the adoration of the Roman people. According to his account, Jupiter was outvoted by a large number of suffrages; the decision was followed by a general desertion of their ancestral deities by the obsequious minority; the old hereditary names, the Annii and the Probi, the Anicii and Olybii, the Paulini and Bassi, the popular Gracchi, six hundred families, at once passed over to the Christian cause.* The Pagan historian to a certain degree confirms the fact of the deliberate discussion, but differs as to the result. The senate. he states, firmly, but respectfully, adhered to their ancient deities.† But the last argument of the Pagan advocates was fatal to their cause. dosius refused any longer to assign funds from the public revenue to maintain the charge of the idolatrous worship. The senate remonstrated, that if Prud. ad Symmach. Prudentius has probably amplified some considerable desertion of the wavering and dubious believers.

† Zosim. Hist. iv. 59.

^{*} Sexcentas numerare domos de sanguine prisco Nobilium licet, ad Christi signacula versas, Turpis ab idolii vasto emersisse profundo.

ed to be supported at the national cost, d cease to be national rites. This argumore likely to confirm than to shake the ition of the Christian Emperor. the temples were deserted; the priests esses, deprived of their maintenance, were The public temples still stood, abroad. t forbidden to worship within them, withice; the private, and family, or Gentile ill preserved their influence. Theodosius year after the defeat of Eugenius. rsue to its close the history of Western A. D. 895. , which was buried at last in the ruins of e. Gratian had dissevered the supremacy cional religion from the imperial dignity; onfiscated the property of the temples; us had refused to defray the expense of rifices from the public funds. Still, howoutward form of Paganism remained.

esthoods were still handed down in regunt; the rites of various deities, even of nd Cybele, were celebrated without sacriwith sacrifice, furtively performed; the on of the aruspices was not abolished. ill likewise remained a special provision n festivals and public amusements.* The of the sacred banquets and of the games yed by the state: an early law of Honoected the common enjoyments of the called the vectigal † Communis populi lætitta.

The poem of Prudentius * acknowledges that the enactments of Theodosius had been far from altogether successfult; his bold assertion of the universal adoption of Christianity by the whole senate is in some degree contradicted by his admission that the old pestilence of idolatry had again broken out in Rome.‡ It implies that the restoration of the statue of Victory had again been urged, and by the indefatigable Symmachus, on the sons of Theodosius. § The poem was written after the battle of Pollentia, as it triumphantly appeals to the glories of that day, against the argument that Rome was indebted for the victories of former times to her ancient gods. It closes with an earnest admonition to the son of Theodosius to fulfil the task which was designedly left him by the piety of his father ||, to suppress at once the vestal virgins, and

- * The poem of Prudentius is it is original, and in some parts by no means a recapitulation of very vigorous. the arguments of St. Ambrose;
 - † Inclitus ergo parens patriæ, moderator et orbis, Nil egit prohibendo, vagas ne pristinus error Crederet esse Deûm nigrante sub aere formas.
 - ‡ Sed quoniam renovata lues turbare salutem Tentat Romulidum.
 - Armorum dominos, vernantes flore juventæ,
 Inter castra patris genitos, sub imagine avità
 Eductos, exempla domi congesta tenentes, Orator catus instigat.
 Si vobis vel parta, viri, victoria cordi est,
 Vel parienda dehinc, templum Dea virgo sacratum Obtineat, vobis regnantibus.

The orator catus, is Symmachus; the parta victoria, that of Pollentia; the Dea virgo, Victory.

Quam tibi supplendam Deus, et genitoris amica Servavit pietas: solus ne præmia tantæ Virtutis caperet "partem, tibi, nate reservo," Dixit, et integrum decus intactumque reliquit. Sub fin.

A. D. 403.

above all, the gladiatorial shows, which they were CHAP. accustomed to countenance by their presence.

In the year 408 came forth the edict which Law of aimed at the direct and complete abolition of Pa- Honorius. ganism throughout the Western empire. The whole of this reserved provision for festivals was swept away; it was devoted to the more useful purpose, the pay of the loyal soldiery.* The same edict proceeded to actual violence, to invade and take possession of the sanctuaries of religion. All images were to be thrown down; the edifices, now useless and deserted, to be occupied by the imperial officers, and appropriated to useful purposes. † The government, wavering between demolition and desecration, devised this plan for the preservation of these great ornaments of the cities, which thus, taken under the protection of the magistracy as · public property, were secured from the destructive zeal of the more fanatical Christians. All sacrilegious rites, festivals, and ceremonies were prohibited. The bishops of the towns were invested with power to suppress these forbidden usages, and the civil authorities, as though the government mistrusted their zeal, were bound, under a heavy penalty, to obey the summons, and to assist the prelates in the extirpation of idolatry. Another edict excluded all enemies of the Christian faith from the great public offices in the state and in the then, and they will either them-selves invite us, or anticipate us † Augustine (though not en-irely consistent) disapproved of the forcible demolition of the tem-work." Tom. v. p. 62.

^{*} Expensis devotissimorum mi- idolatry of the hearts of the Healitum profutura.

Ples. "Let us first extirpate the army, and this, if fully carried into effect, would have transferred the whole power throughout the empire into the hands of the Christians. But the times were not yet ripe for this measure. Generides, a Pagan, in a high command in the army, threw up his commission. The edict was repealed.*

* Prudentius ventures to admire the tolerant impartiality of Theodosius, in admitting both parties alike to civil and military honours. He urges this argumentum ad hominem against Symmachus:—

Denique pro meritis terrestribus æqua rependens Munera, sacricolis summos impertit honores Dux bonus, et certare sinit cum laude suorum. Nec pago implicitos per debita culmina mundi Ire vetat.

Ipse magistratum tibi consulis, ipse tribunal Contulit.

In the East, the Pagan Themistius had been appointed præfect of Constantinople by Theodosius. It is curious to read his flatteries of the orthodox Christian Emperor; he praises his love of philosophy in the most fervent language.

The most remarkable instance of this inconsistency, at a much later period, occurs in the person of Merobaudes, a general and a poet, who flourished in the first half of the fifth century. A statue in honour of Merobaudes was placed in the Forum of Trajan, of which the inscription is still extant. Fragments of his poems have been discovered by the industry and sagacity of Niebuhr. In one passage, Mcrobaudes, in the genuine Heathen spirit, attributes the ruin of the empire to the abolition of Paganism, and almost renews the old accusation of Atheism against Christianity. He impersonates some deity, probably Discord, who summons Bellona to take arms for the destruction of Rome; and, in a strain of fierce irony, recommends to her, among other fatal measures, to extirpate the gods of Rome:

Roma, ipsique tremant furialia murmura reges.
Jam superos terris, atque hospita numina pelle:
Romanos populare Deos, et nullus in aris
Vestæ exoratæ, fotus strue, palleat ignis.
His instructa dolis palatia celsa subibo, Majorum mores, et pectora prisca fugabo
Funditus, atque simul, nullo discrimine rerum, Spernantur fortes, nec sit reverentia justis.
Attica neglecto pereat facundia Phæbo,
Indignis contingat honos, et pondera rerum.
Non virtus sed casus agat, tristisque cupido;
Pectoribus sævi demens furor æstuet ævi;
Omniaque hæc sine mente Jovis, sine numine summo.
Merobaudes in Niebuhr's edit. of the Byzantines.

Rome once more beheld the shadow of a Pagan Emperor, Attalus, while the Christian Emperor naintained his court at Rayenna; and both stood rembling before the victorious Alaric. When that riumphant Goth formed the siege of Rome, Paganism, as if grateful for the fidelity of the imperial city, made one last desperate effort to avert the common ruin. Pagan magic was the last refuge of conscious weakness. The Etrurian soothsayers were called forth from their obscurity, with the concurrence of the whole city (the Pope himself is aid to have assented to the idolatrous ceremony), to blast the barbaric invader with the lightnings of Jupiter. The Christian historian saves the credit of his party, by asserting that they kept away from the profane rite.* But it may be doubted, after all, whether the ceremony really took place; both parties had more confidence in the power of a large sum of money, offered to arrest the career of the triumphant barbarian.

The impartial fury of Alaric fell alike on church and temple, on Christian and Pagan. But the capture of Rome consummated the ruin of Paganism. The emples, indeed, were for the most part left standing, out their worshippers had fled. The Roman aristoracy, in whom alone Paganism still retained its most powerful adherents, abandoned the city, and, scattered in the provinces of the empire, were absorbed in the rapidly Christianising population. The deserted buildings had now neither public authority nor private zeal and munificence to maintain them against the encroachments of time or accident, to support the tottering roof, or repair the broken column. There was neither public fund, nor private contribution, for their preservation, till at length the Christians, in many instances, took possession of the abandoned edifice, converted it to their own use, and hallowed it by a new consecration. Thus, in many places, though marred and disfigured, the monuments of architecture survived, with no great violation of the ground plan, distribution, or general proportions.

* Zosimus, v. Sozomen, ix. 6.

Paganism was, in fact, left to die out by gradual dissolution. ‡ The worship of the Heathen deities lingered in many temples, till it was superseded by the new form of Christianity, which, at least in its outward appearance, approximated to Polytheism: the Virgin gradually supplanted many of the local deities. In Sicily, which long remained obstinately wedded to the ancient faith, eight celebrated temples were dedicated to the Mother of God. § It

* There are many churches in Rome, which, like the Pantheon, are ancient temples; thirty-nine built on the foundations of temples. Four retain Pagan names. S. Maria sopra Minerva, S. Maria Aventina, S. Lorenzo in Matuta, S. Stefano in Cacco. At Sienna, the temple of Quirinus became the church of S. Quirino. Beugnot, ii. p. 266. See in Bingham, book viii. s. 4., references to several churches in the East, converted into temples. But this passage must be read with caution.

† In some cases, by a more destructive appropriation, they converted the materials to their own use, and worked them up into their own barbarous churches.

† The fifth council of Carthage (A.D. 398.), can. xv., petitioned the most glorious Emperors to destroy the remains of idolatry, not merely "in simulacris," but in other places, groves, and trees.

§ Beugnot, ii. 271.; from Aprile, Chronologia Universale de Sicilià. was not till the seventh century, that the Pantheon CHAP. was dedicated by Pope Boniface IV. to the Holy Virgin. Of the public festivals, the last which clung with tenacious grasp to the habits of the Roman people, was the Lupercalia. It was suppressed towards the close of the fifth century by A. D. 493. Pope Gelasius. The rural districts were not completely Christianised until the general introduction of monasticism. Heathenism was still prevalent in many parts of Italy, especially in the neighbourhood of Turin, in the middle of the fifth century.* It was the missionary from the convent who wandered through the villages, or who, from his monastery, regularly discharged the duties of a village pastor. St. Benedict of Nursia destroyed the worship of Apollo on Mount Casino.

Every where the superstition survived the religion, and that which was unlawful under Paganism, continued to be unlawfully practised under Christianity. The insatiable propensity of men to enquire into futurity, and to deal with secret and invisible agencies, which reason condemns, and often, while it condemns, consults, retained its old formularies, some religious, some pretending to be magical or theurgic. Divination and witchcraft have never been extinct in Italy, or, perhaps, in any part of Europe. The descendants of Canidia or Erictho, the seer and the magician, have still prac-infamous name of heretics, and forbid their conventicles to assume the name of churches; we reserve their punishment to the vengeance of heaven, and to such measures as divine inspiration shall dictate to us." * Thus the religion of the whole Roman world was enacted by two feeble boys, and a rude Spanish soldier.† The next year witnessed the condemnation of all heretics, particularly the Photinians, Arians, and Eunomians, and the expulsion of the Arians from the churches of all the cities in the East[‡], and their surrender to the only lawful form of Christianity. On the assembling of the council of Chalcedon, two severe laws were issued against Apostates and Manicheans, prohibiting them from making wills. During its sitting, the Emperor promulgated an edict, prohibiting the Arians from building churches either in the cities or in the country, under pain of the confiscation of the funds devoted to the purpose.§

^{*} See the sermons of Maximus, bishop of Turin, quoted in Beugnot, ii. 253.

All the more powerful ecclesiastical writers favourable to Trinitarianism.

The circumstances of the times happily coincided with the design of Theodosius to concentre the whole Christian world into one vigorous and consistent system. The more legitimate influence of argument and intellectual and religious supe-

* Post etiam motus nostri, quem ex cœlesti arbitrio sumpserimus, ultione plectendos. Godefroy supposes these words not to mean "cœleste oraculum," but, "Dei arbitrium, regulam et formulam juris divini."

+ Baronius, and even Godefroy, call this law a golden, pious, and wholesome statute. Happily it was on the right side.

† On the accession of Theodosius, according to Sozomen, the Arians possessed all the churches of the East, except Jerusalem. H. E. vii. 2.

§ Sozomen mentions these severe laws, but asserts that they were enacted merely in terrorem, and with no design of carrying them into execution. H. E. vii. 12.

riority concurred with the stern mandates of the civil power. All the great and commanding minds of the age were on the same side, as to the momentous and strongly agitated questions of the faith. The productive energies of Arianism seemed, as it were, exhausted; its great defenders had passed away, and left, apparently, no heirs to their virtues or abilities. It was distracted with schisms. and had to bear the unpopularity of the sects, which seemed to have sprung from it in the natural course, the Eunomians, Macedonians, and a still multiplying progeny of heresies. Every where the Trinitarian prelates rose to ascendancy, not merely from the support of the government, but from their pre-eminent character or intellectual powers. Each province seemed to have produced some individual adapted to the particular period and circumstances of the time, who devoted himself to the establishment of the Athanasian opinions. The intractable Egypt, more particularly turbulent Alexandria, was ruled by the strong arm of the bold and unprincipled Theophilus. The dreamy mysticism of Syria found a congenial representative in Ephrem. more intellectual, yet still somewhat imaginative, Orientalism animates the writings of St. Basil; in a less degree, those of Gregory of Nazianzum; still less, those of Gregory of Nyssa. The more powerful and Grecian eloquence of Chrysostom swayed the popular mind in Constantinople. Jerom, a link, as it were, between the East and the West, transplanted the monastic spirit and opinions of Syria into Rome; and brought into the East much of the severer thought, and more prosaic reasoning, the Latin world. In Gaul, where Hilary of Poitie had long maintained the cause of Trinitarianism on the borders of civilisation, St. Martin of Tou acted the part of a bold and enterprising missionary while in Milan, the court capital of the West, tl strong practical character of Ambrose, his stern conscientious moral energy, though hardening times into rigid intolerance, with the masculi strength of his style, confirmed the Latin chur in that creed, to which Rome had adhered wi almost unshaken fidelity. If not the greatest, the most permanently influential of all, Augustin united the intense passion of the African min with the most comprehensive and systematic view and intrepid dogmatism on the darkest subject United in one common cause, acting in the several quarters according to their peculiar ter peraments and characters, these strong-minded as influential ecclesiastics almost compelled the wor into a temporary peace, till first Pelagianism, at afterwards Nestorianism, unsettled again the reless elements; the controversies, first concernia grace, free-will, and predestination, then on the i carnation and two natures of Christ, succeeded the silenced and exhausted feud concerning tl trinity of persons in the Godhead.

CHAP. IX. BOOK

Theophilus of Alexandria, bishop, from 385 to 412. Theophilus of Alexandria performed his pa in the complete subjection of the world, by h energy as a ruler, not by the slower and mo legitimate influence of moral persuasion through his preaching or his writings.* He suppressed, Arianism by the same violent and coercive means with which he extirpated Paganism. The tone of this prelate's epistles is invariably harsh and criminatory. He appears in the best light as opposing the vulgar anthropomorphism of the monks in the neighbourhood of Alexandria, and insisting on the pure spiritual nature of the Deity. Yet he condescended to appease these turbulent adversaries by an unmanly artifice. He consented to condemn the doctrines of Origen, who, having reposed quietly in his tomb for many years, in general respect, if not in the odour of sanctity, was exhumed, as it were, by the zeal of later times, as a dangerous The Oriental doctrines with which heresiarch. Origen had impregnated his system were unpopular, and perhaps not clearly understood.† The notion that the reign of Christ was finite was rather an inference from his writings, than a tenet of Origen. For if all bodies were to be finally annihilated (according to his anti-materialist system), the humanity of Christ, and consequently his personal reign, must The possibility that the devil might, after long purification, be saved, and the corruptibility of the body after the resurrection, grew out of the same Oriental cast of opinions. But the perfectly pure and immaterial nature of the Deity was the tenet of Origen which was the most odious to the monks; and Theophilus, by anathematising Origenism in the mass, while he himself held certainly the sublimest, but to his adversaries most objectionable part of the system, adopted a low and undignified deception. The persecution of Isidore, and the heads of the monasteries who befriended his cause (the tall brethren, as they were called), from personal motives of animosity, display the Alexandrian prelate in his ordinary character. We shall again encounter Theophilus in the lamentable intrigues against the advancement and influence of Chrysostom.

^{*} I have not placed these writers in their strict chronological tries in which they lived.

CHAP.

^{*} The Trinitarian doctrines had been maintained in Alexandria by the virtues and abilities of Didymus the Blind.

⁺ Socrates, vi. 10. Sozomen, viii. 13.

S. Ephrem, the Syrian, died 379.

The character of Ephrem*, the Syrian, was the exact counterpart to that of the busy and worldly A native of Nisibis, or rather of its Theophilus. neighbourhood, Ephrem passed the greater part of his life at Edessa, and in the monastic establishments which began to abound in Mesopotamia and Syria, as in Egypt. His genius was that of the people in whose language he wrote his numerous compositions in prose and verse.† In Ephrem something of the poetic mysticism of the Gnostic was allied with the most rigid orthodoxy of doctrine. But with his imaginative turn were mingled a depth and intensity of feeling, which gave him his peculiar influence over the kindred minds of his countrymen. Tears were as natural to him as perspiration; day and night, in his devout seclusion, he wept νικής, τούς τε πολυσχιζεῖς τῶν Έλλήνων διήλεγξε πλάνους, καὶ πάσης αἰρετικής κακοτεχνίας ἰγιμωσε τὴν ἀσθένειαν. The refutation of Greek heresy in Syriac must have been curious.

[•] See the Life of Ephrem prefixed to his works; and in Tillemont.

[†] According to Theodoret, he was unacquainted with Greek. Παιδείας γάρ οὐ γεγευμένος έλλη-for the sins of mankind and for his own; his very writings, it was said, weep; there is a deep and . IX. latent sorrow even in his panegyrics or festival homilies.*

Ephrem was a poet, and his hymns, poured forth in the prodigality of his zeal, succeeded at length in entirely disenchanting the popular ear from the heretical strains of Bardesanes, and his son Harmonius, which lingered after the general decay of Gnosticism.† The hymns of Ephrem were sung on the festivals of the martyrs. His psalms, the constant occupation which he enjoins upon his monkish companions, were always of a sorrowful and contrite tone. Laughter was the source and the indication of all wickedness, sorrow of all virtue. During the melancholy psalm, God was present with his angels, all more joyous strains belonged to heathenism and idolatry.

The monasticism as well as the Trinitarianism of Syria, received a strong impulse from Ephrem, and in Syria monasticism began to run into its utmost extravagance. There was one class of ascetics who, at certain periods, forsook their cities, and retired to the mountains to browse on the herbage which they found, as their only food. The writings of Ephrem were the occupation and delight of all these gentle and irreproachable fanatics; and, as Ephrem was rigidly Trinitarian, he contributed to fix the doctrinal language of the various comobitic works, vol. i. 104—107. Non esse tianis. ridendum sed lugendum potius + T step plorandum; and, Quod luinstitutions and solitary hermitages. In fact, the quiescent intellect probably rejoiced in being relieved from these severe and ungrateful enquiries: and full freedom being left to the imagination, and ample scope to the language, in the vague and fervent expressions of divine love, the Syrian mind felt not the restriction of the rigorous creed, and passively surrendered itself to ecclesiastical authority. Absorbed in its painful and melancholy struggles with the internal passions and appetites, it desired not to provoke, but rather to repress, the dangerous activity of the reason. The orthodoxy of Ephrem himself savours perhaps of timidity and the disinclination to agitate such awful and appalling questions. He would elude and escape them. and abandon himself altogether to the more edifying emotions which it is the chief object of his writings to excite and maintain. The dreamer must awake in order to reason, and he prefers the passive tranquillity of the half-waking state.

^{*} See the two treatises in his dicris rebus abstinendum sit Chris-

⁺ Theodoret, iv. 29.

Greece, properly so called, contributed none of the more distinguished names in Eastern Christianity. Even the Grecian part of Asia Minor was by no means fertile in names which survive in the annals of the Church. In Athens philosophy still lingered, and struggled to maintain its predominance. Many of the more eminent ecclesiastics had visited its schools in their youth, to obtain those lessons of rhetoric and profane knowledge which they were hereafter to dedicate to their own sacred uses. But they were foreigners, and, in the old language of Greece, would have been called barbarians.

The rude and uncivilised Cappadocia gave birth to Basil and the two Gregories. The whole of, the less dreamy, and still active and commercial, Cappapart of Asia was influenced by Basil, on whose character and writings his own age lavished the most unbounded praise. The name of Basil is constantly united with those of the two Gregories. Gregory of Nyssa, was his brother; the other, named from his native town of Nazianzum, of which his father was bishop, was the intimate friend of his boyhood and of his later years. The language, the eloquence, the opinions of these writers retain, in different degrees, some tinge of Asiatic colour-Far more intelligible and practical than the mystic strains and passionate homilies of Ephrem, they delight in agitating, though in a more modest spirit, the questions which had inflamed the imagination of the Gnostics. But with them, likewise, enquiry proceeds with cautious and reverent steps. On these subjects they are rigorously orthodox, and assert the exclusive doctrines of Athanasius with the most distinct and uncompromising energy. Basil maintained the cause of Trinitarianism with unshaken fidelity during its days of depression and adversity. His friend Gregory of Nazianzum lived to witness and bear a great part in its triumph. Both Basil and Gregory were ardent admirers, and in themselves transcendant models of the more monastic Christianity. The influence of Basil crowded that part of Asia with coenobitic institutions: but in his monasteries labour and useful VOL. 111. o industry prevailed to a greater extent than Syrian deserts.

Basil was a native of the Cappadocian Ca He was an hereditary Christian. His gran had retired during the Dioclesian persecut mountain forest in Pontus. His father was of estimation as a lawyer, possessed consi property, and was remarkable for his ; beauty. His mother, in person and charac worthy of her husband. The son of such received the best education which could stowed on a Christian youth. Having ex the instruction to be obtained in his nati of Cæsarea, he went to Constantinople, wh is reputed to have studied the art of rhetoric the celebrated Libanius. But Athens was centre of liberal education, and, with other ing youths from the Eastern provinces, Basil friend Gregory resided for some time in th But with all his taste for letters and eloquene Basil always spoke even of profane learning generous respect, far different from the contempt and animosity expressed by some w Christianity was too deeply rooted in his h be endangered either by the studies or the of Athens. On his return to Cæsarea, he en the ascetic faith of the times with more tha nary fervour. He abandoned his proper practised such severe austerities as to inju health, and to reduce his bodily form to the e ^{*} Life of Basil, prefixed to his works, and Tillemont, V Basile.

CHAP.

of meagreness and weakness. He was "without wife, without property, without flesh, almost without blood." He fled into the desert; his fame collected, as it were, a city around him; he built a monastery, and monasteries sprang up on every Yet the opinions of Basil concerning the monastic life were far more moderate and practical than the wilder and more dreamy asceticism which prevailed in Egypt and in Syria. He admired and persuaded his followers to comobitic, not to eremitical, life. It was the life of the industrious religious community, not of the indolent and solitary anchorite, which to Basil was the perfection of Christianity. All ties of kindred were indeed to give place to that of spiritual association. loves a brother in blood more than a brother in the religious community is still a slave to his carnal nature.* The indiscriminate charity of these institutions, was to receive orphans of all classes for education and maintenance, but other children only with the consent, or at the request of parents, certified before witnesses; and vows of virginity were by no means to be enforced upon these youthful Slaves who fled to the monasteries were to be admonished, and sent back to their owners. There is one reservation, that slaves were not bound to obey their master, if he should order what is contrary to the laws of God. ‡ Industry was to be the animating principle of these settlements. Prayer and psalmody were to have their appointed

Book III. hours; but by no means to intrude upon those devoted to useful labour. These labours were strictly defined, such as were of real use to the community, not those which might contribute to vice or luxury. Agriculture was especially recommended. The life was in no respect to be absorbed in a perpetual mystic communion with the Deity.

A. D. 366.

See ch.viii. p. 125. Basil lived in his monastic retirement during a great part of the triumphant period of Arianism in the East; but during the reign of Valens, he was recalled to Cæsarea, to be the champion of Trinitarianism against the Emperor and his Arian partisans. The firmness of Basil, as we have seen, commanded the respect even of his adversaries. In the midst of the raging controversy, he was raised to the archepiscopal throne of Cæsarea. He governed the see with activity and diligence: not only the influence of his writings, but his actual authority (his pious ambition of usefulness induced him perhaps to overstep the limits of his diocese) extended beyond Cappadocia, into Armenia and behold its final triumph. His decease followed immediately upon the defeat and death of Valens.

He was the firm supporter of

L. D. 970.

A. D. 379.

The style of Basil did no discredit to his Atheren the Nicene Trinitarianism, but did not live to parts of Asia Minor.

The style of Basil did no discredit to his Athenian education; in purity and perspicuity he surpasses most of the Heathen, as well as the Christian writers of his age.

Gregory of Nazianzum. Gregory of Nazianzum, as he shared the friendship, so he has constantly participated in the fame of Basil. He was born in a village, Arianza, within the district of Nazianzum, his father was bishop of that city.* With Basil he passed a part of his CHAP. youth at Athens, and predicted, according to his own account, the apostasy of Julian, from the observation of his character, and even of his person. Gregory is his own biographer; one or rather two poems, the first consisting of above two thousand iambics, the second of hexameters, describe the whole course of his early life. But Grecian poetry His poems was not to be awakened from its long slumber by the voice of a Christian poet. It was faithful to its ancient source of inspiration. Christian thoughts and images will not blend with the language of Homer and the tragedians. Yet the autobiographical poems of Gregory illustrate a remarkable peculiarity which distinguishes modern and Christian from the older, more particularly the Grecian, poetry. In the Grecian poetry, as in Grecian life, the public absorbed the individual character. person of the poet rarely appears, unless occasionally as the poet, as the objective author or reciter, not as the subject of the poem. The Elegiac Characteristic difpoets of Greece, if we may judge from the few ference besurviving fragments, and the amatory writers of Greek and Rome, speak in their proper persons, utter their Christian poetry. individual thoughts, and embody their peculiar In the shrewd common life view of Horace, and, indeed in some of his higher lyric poetry, the poet is more prominent; and the fate

^{*}Tillemont is grievously embarrassed by the time of Gre-knowledge the laxity of ecclesias-tical discipline on this head, at this period of the church. after his father had attained the BOOK 11L of Ovid, one day basking in the imperial favour, the next, for some mysterious offence, banished to the bleak shores of the Euxine, seemed to give him the privilege of dwelling upon his own sorrows; his strange fate invested his life in peculiar But by the Christian scheme, the individual man has assumed a higher importance; his actions, his opinions, the emotions of his mind, as connected with his immortal state, have acquired a new and commanding interest, not only to himself but to others. The poet profoundly scrutinises, and elaborately reveals, the depths of his moral being. The psychological history of the man, in all its minute particulars, becomes the predominant matter of the poem. In this respect, these autobiographical poems of Gregory, loose as they are in numbers, and spun out with a wearisome and garrulous mediocrity; and wanting that depth and passion of religion which has made the Confessions of Augustine one of the most permanently popular of Christian writings, possess nevertheless some interest, as indicating the transition state in poetry, as well as illustrating the thought and feeling prevalent among the Christian youth of the period. The one great absorbing question was the comparative excellence of the secular and the monastic life, the state of marriage or of virginity. thusiasm of the East scarcely deigned to submit this point to discussion. In one of Gregory's poems, Marriage and Virginity each plead their cause; but there can be no doubt, from the first, to which will be assigned the victory. The Saviour gives to Virginity the place of honour on his right hand. CHAP. Gregory had never entangled himself with marriage, that fatal tie which enthralls the soul in the bonds of matter. For him silken robes, gorgeous banquets, splendid palaces, music and perfumes, had no charm. He disregarded wealth, and feasted contentedly on bread with a little salt, and water for his only drink. The desire of supporting the declining age of his parents thwarted his holy ambition of withdrawing from all worldly intercourse: but this became a snare. He was embarrassed by refractory servants, by public and private business. The death of his brother involved him still more inextricably in affairs, arising out of his contested property. But the faithless friendship of Basil, which he deplores in the one touching passage of his whole poem *, still further endangered his peace. In the zeal of Basil to fill the bishoprics Gregory, bishop of of his metropolitan diocese, calculating perhaps Sasima. that Gregory, like himself, would generously sacrifice the luxury of religious quietude for the more useful duties of a difficult active position, he imposed upon his reluctant friend the charge of the newly created see of Sasima. This was a small and miserable town, at the meeting of three roads, in

Value of Gregory's.

* Gibbon's selection of this pas-sage, and his happy illustration to his poetical taste;

Πόνοι κοίνοι λόγων 'Ομόστεγός τε, καὶ συνέστιος βίος, Νοῦς είς ἐν ἀμφοῖν * * Διεσκέδασται πάντα, καρρίπται χαμαί, Αύραι φέρουσι τάς παλαιάς έλπιδας.

Is all the counsel that we two have shared, The sisters' vows, &c. Helena, in the Midsummer Night's Dream. See Gibbon, c. xxvii. vol. v. p. 18.

a country at once arid, marshy, and unwholesome, noisy and dusty from the constant passage of travellers, the disputes with extortionate custom-house officers, and all the tumult and drunkenness belonging to a town inhabited by loose and passing With Basil, Gregory had passed the strangers. tranquil days of his youth, the contemplative period of his manhood; together they had studied at Athens, together they had twice retired to monastic solitude; and this was the return for his long and tried attachment! Gregory, in the bitterness of his remonstrance, at one time assumes the language of an Indian faquir. Instead of rejoicing in the sphere opened to his activity, he boldly asserts his supreme felicity to be total inaction.* He submitted with the strongest repugnance to the office. and abandoned it, almost immediately, on the first He afterwards administered the see opposition. of Nazianzum under his father, and even after his father's decease, without assuming the episcopal title.

Gregory, bishop of Constantinople,

From A.D. 339 to 379. But Gregory was soon compelled by his own fame for eloquence and for orthodoxy to move in a more arduous and tumultuous sphere. For forty years Arianism had been dominant in Constantinople. The Arians mocked at the small number which still lingered in the single religious assemblage of the Athanasian party.† Gregory is constrained to admit this humiliating fact, and indig-

^{} Έμοι δὲ μεγίστη πρᾶξις ἔστιν they met ἐν μικρῷ οἰκίσκῳ. Soἡ ἀπραξία. Epist. xxxiii. p. 797. crates, iv. l. † In the reign of Valentinian, nantly inquires, whether the sands are more precious than the stars of heaven, or the pebbles than pearls, because they are more numerous? the accession of Theodosius opened a new æra to the Trinitarians. The religion of the Emperor would no longer condescend to this humble and secondary station. Gregory was invited to take charge of the small community which was still faithful to the doctrines of Athanasius. was already bowed with age and infirmity; his bald head stooped to his bosom; his countenance was worn by his austerities and his inward spiritual conflicts, when he reluctantly sacrified his peace for this great purpose t The Catholics had no church; they met in a small house, on the site of which afterwards arose the celebrated church of St. Anastasia. The eloquence of Gregory wrought wonders in the busy and versatile capital. Arians themselves crowded to hear him. versaries were reduced to violence; the Anastasia was attacked; the Arian monks, and even the virgins, mingled in the furious fray: many lives were lost, and Gregory was accused as the cause His innocence, and the known of the tumult. favour of the Emperor, secured his acquittal; his eloquence was seconded by the imperial edicts. The law had been promulgated which denounced as heretics all who rejected the Nicene Creed.

The influence of Gregory was thwarted, and his peace disturbed, by the strange intrigues of one Maximus to possess himself of the episcopal throne

CHAP. IX.

⁴ Orat. xxv. p. 431.

⁺ Tillemont, art. xlvi.

BOOK

of Constantinople. Maximus was called the Cy from his attempt to blend the rude manners, coarse white dress, his enemies added, the vices that sect, with the profession of Christianity. memory is loaded with every kind of infamy; by dexterous flattery and assiduous attendance the sermons of Gregory, he had stolen into his suspecting confidence, and received his pu commendations in a studied oration. * Consta nople and Gregory himself were suddenly ama with the intelligence that Maximus had been o secrated the Catholic bishop of the city. extraordinary measure had been taken by se Alexandrians of low birth and character +, v some bishops deputed by Peter the orthodox A bishop of Alexandria. ‡ A number of marin probably belonging to the corn fleet, had assiat the ceremony and raised the customary accla tions. A great tumult of all orders arose; rushed to the church, from which Maximus his party withdrew, and hastily completed a k of tonsure (for the cynic prided himself on his l hair) in the private dwelling of a flute-pla Maximus seems to have been rejected with in nation by the Athanasians of Constantinople, over Constantinople, and so the East? It is observable in his law, Theodosius nam the examples of doctrine, Bishop of Rome in the Yof of Alexandria in the East. intrigues of Theophilus as Chrysostom rather confirm notion of an attempt to ere Eastern papacy.

* The panegyric on the philosopher Heron.

[†] Some of their names were whimsically connected with the Egyptian mythology, Ammon, Anubis, and Hermanubis.

[†] The interference of the Egyptians is altogether remarkable. Could there be a design to establish the primacy of Alexandria adhered with unshaken fidelity to Gregory; he fled CHAP. to the court of Theodosius, but the earliest measure adopted by the Emperor to restore strength to the orthodox party, was the rejection of the intrusive prelate.

The first act of Theodosius on his arrival at 24th Nov. Constantinople, was to issue an edict, expelling the Arians from the churches, and summoning Demophilus, the Arian bishop, to conform to the Nicene doctrine. Demophilus refused. peror commanded that those who would not unite to establish Christian peace should retire from the houses of Christian prayer. Demophilus assembled his followers, and quoting the words of the Gospel, "If you are persecuted in one city, flee unto another," retired before the irresistible authority of the Emperor. The next step was the appointment of the reluctant Gregory to the see, and his enthronisation, in the principal church of the Environed by the armed legionaries, metropolis. in military pomp, accompanied by the Emperor himself, Gregory, amazed and bewildered, and perhaps sensible of the incongruity of the scene with the true Christian character, headed the triumphal procession. All around he saw the sullen and menacing faces of the Arian multitude, and his ear might catch their suppressed murmurs; even the heavens, for the morning was bleak and cloudy, seemed to look down with cold indifference on the scene. No sooner, however, had Gregory, with the Emperor, passed the rails which divided the sanctuary from the nave of the church, than the sun

BOOK burst forth in his splendour, the clouds were pated, and the glorious light came streami upon the applauding congregation. shout of acclamation demanded the enthroni of Gregory.

But Gregory, commanding only in his eloq from the pulpit, seems to have wanted the fir and vigour necessary for the prelate of a Theodosius summoned the cou metropolis Constantinople; and Gregory, embarrassed multiplicate of affairs; harassed by objections white we has own election; entangled in the which arm out of the contested election Antioch, entreated, and obtained, appa the unreluctant, assent of the bishops and th never to abdicate his dignity, and to retire heloved privacy. His retreat, in some degree turbed by the interest which he still took see of Nazianzum, gradually became more plete, till, at length, he withdrew into solitud ended his days in that peace, which perhal not less sincerely enjoyed from his experie the cares and vexations of worldly dignity. za, his native village, was the place of his seclu the gardens, the trees, the fountain, familiar youth, welcomed his old age. But Gregor not exhausted the fears, the dangers, or the pa The desires of youth still burned of life. withered body, and demanded the severest The sight or even the neighbourho females afflicted his sensitive conscience; a: stead of allowing ease or repose to his aged f his bed was a hard mat, his coverlid sackcloth, his dress one thin tunic; his feet were bare; he allowed himself no fire, and here, in the company of the wild-beasts, he prayed with bitter tears, he fasted, and devoted his hours to the composition of poetry, which, from its extreme difficulty, he considered as an act of penitence. His painful existence was protracted to the age of ninety.

The complete restoration of Constantinople to the orthodox communion demanded even more powerful eloquence, and far more vigorous authonity, than that of Gregory. If it was not finally schieved, its success was secured, by the most splendid orator who had ever adorned the Eastern Sixteen years after the retirement of Gregory, the fame of Chrysostom designated him as the successor to that important dignity.

Chrysostom was the model of a preacher for a Chrysosgreat capital.* Clear, rather than profound, his dogmatic is essentially moulded up with his moral teaching. He is the champion, not so exclusively of any system of doctrines, as of Christian holiness against the vices, the dissolute manners, the engrossing love of amusement, which prevailed in the new Rome of the East. His doctrines flow naturally from his subject, or from the passage of Scripture under discussion; his illustrations are copious and happy; his style free and fluent; while he is an unrivalled master in that rapid and forcible ap-^{*} Compare the several lives of Corysostom by Palladius, that in the Benedictine edition of his Joannes Chrysostomus.

BOOK IIL plication of incidental occurrences, which gives such life and reality to eloquence. He is, at times, in the highest sense, dramatic in his manner.

Chrysostom, like all the more ardent spirits of his age, was enamoured in his early youth of monasticism. But this he had gradually thrown off, even while he remained at Antioch. Though by no means formally abandoning these principles, or lowering his admiration of this imaginary perfection of religion, in his later works he is more free, popular, and practical. His ambition is not so much to elevate a few enthusiastic spirits to a high-toned and mystic piety, as to impregnate the whole population of a great capital with Christian virtue and self-denial.

Lafe of Chrysostom. John, who obtained the name of Chrysostom, the golden-mouthed, was born at Antioch, about the year 347. He was brought up by his mother in the Christian faith; he studied rhetoric under the celebrated Libanius, who used his utmost arts, and displayed all that is captivating in Grecian poetry and philosophy, to enthral the imagination of his promising pupil. Libanius, in an extant epistle, rejoices at the success of Chrysostom at the bar in Antioch. He is said to have lamented on his death-bed the sacrilegious seduction of the young orator by the Christians; for to him he had intended to bequeath his school, and the office of maintaining the dignity of Paganism.

But the eloquence of Chrysostom was not to waste itself in the barren litigations of the courts of justice in Antioch, or in the vain attempt to innew life into the dead philosophy and religion reece. He felt himself summoned to a nobler At the age of eighteen, Chrysostom began tudy that one source of eloquence, to which human heart responded, the sacred writings The church was not slow in he Christians. gnising the value of such a proselyte. ived the strongest encouragement from Mele-Bishop of Antioch; he was appointed a reader ne church. But the soul of Chrysostom was likely to embrace these stirring tenets with ness or moderation. A zealous friend inflamed. recept and emulation, the fervour of his piety: proposed to retire to one of the most remote nitages in Syria; and the great Christian orator almost self-doomed to silence, or to exhaust power of language in prayers and ejaculations, d by no human ear. The mother of Chrysossaved the Christian church from this fatal loss. re is something exquisitely touching in the s of domestic affection which sometimes gleam ugh the busy pages of history. His mother become a widow at the age of twenty; to the eral admiration, she had remained faithful to the nory of her husband, and to her maternal duties. soon as she heard the determination of her son etire to a distant region (Chrysostom himself tes the incident), she took him by the hand, led him to her chamber, she made him sit by on the bed, in which she had borne him, and st out into tears, and into language more sad 1 tears. She spoke of the cares and troubles of widowhood; grievous as they had been, she h ever one consolation, the gazing on his face, a beholding in him the image of his departed fath Before he could speak, he had thus been her co She reminded him of the fidel fort and her jov. with which she had administered the paternal pi "Think not that I would reproach y with these things. I have but one favour to treat - make me not a second time a widor awaken not again my slumbering sorrows. Wa at least, for my death; perhaps I shall depart before long. When you have laid me in the earth, a reunited my bones to those of your father, th travel wherever thou wilt, even beyond the se but, as long as I live, endure to dwell in my hou and offend not God by afflicting your mother, w is at least blameless towards thee." *

CHAP.

Whether released by the death of his mother, hurried away by the irresistible impulse whi would not allow him to withhold himself from whe calls "the true philosophy," Chrysostom, so years afterwards, entered into one of the mon teries in the neighbourhood of Antioch. He hardly escaped the episcopal dignity, which valmost forced upon him by the admirers of early piety. Whether he considered this gen violence lawful to compel devout Christians assume awful dignity, he did not hesitate to pr tise a pious fraud on his friend Basilius, with whe promised to submit to consecration. Basil found himself a bishop, but looked in vain for his treacherous friend, who had deceived him into this momentous step, but deserted him at the appointed hour.

^{*} M. Villemain, in his Essai out the exquisite simplicity sur l'Eloquence Chrètienne dans le Quatrième Siécle, has pointed Sacerdotio, i.

CHAP.

But the voice of Chrysostom was not doomed to silence even in his seclusion. The secession of so many of the leading youths from the duties of civil life, from the municipal offices and the service of the army, had awakened the jealousy of the govern-Valens issued his edict against those "followers of idleness."* The monks were, in some instances, assailed by popular outrage; parents, against whose approbation their children had deserted their homes and retired into the desert. appealed to the imperial authority to maintain their own. Chrysostom came forward as the zealous, the vehement, advocate of the "true philosophy." † He threatened misery in this life, and all the pains of hell (of which he is prodigal in his early writings) against the unnatural, the soul-slaving fathers, who forced their sons to expose themselves to the guilt and danger of the world, and forbade them to enter into the earthly society of angels; thus he describes the monasteries near Antioch. He relates, with triumph, the clandestine conversion of a noble youth, through the connivance of his mother, whom the father, himself a soldier, had destined to serve in the armies of the empire.

But Chrysostom himself, whether he considered that the deep devotion of the monastery, for some years, had braced his soul to encounter the more perilous duties of the priesthood, appeared again in Antioch. His return was hailed by Flavianus, the bishop, who had succeeded to Meletius. He was ordained deacon, and then presbyter, and at once took his station in that office, which was sometimes reserved for the Bishop, as the principal preacher in that voluptuous and effeminate city.

^{*} Ignaviæ sectatores.

[†] Adversus Oppugnatores Vitæ Monasticæ.

The fervid imagination and glowing eloquence of Chrysostom, which had been lavished on the angelic immunity of the comobite or the hermit from the passions, ambition, and avarice inseparable from a secular life, now arrayed his new office in a dignity and saintly perfection, which might awake the purest ambition of the Christian. Chrysostom has the most exalted notion of the majesty, at the same time of the severity, of the sacerdotal character. His views of the office, of its mission and authority, are the most sublime; his demands upon their purity, blamelessness, and superiority to the rest of mankind, proportionably rigorous.

Nor, in the loftiness of his tone as a preacher, or his sanctity as a man, did he fall below his own standard of the Christian priesthood. His preaching already took its peculiar character. It was not so much addressed to the opinions as to the conscience of man. He threw aside the subtleties of speculative theology, and repudiated, in general, the fine-drawn allegory in which the interpreters of Scripture had displayed their ingenuity, and amazed and fruitlessly wearied their unimproved audience. His scope was plain, severe, practical. Rigidly orthodox in his doctrine, he seemed to dwell more on the fruits of a pure theology (though at times he could not keep aloof from controversy), than on theology itself.

If, in her ordinary course of voluptuous amusement, of constant theatrical excitement, Antioch could not but listen to the commanding voice of the Christian orator, it is no wonder that in her hour of danger, possibly of impending ruin, the whole city stood trembling and awestruck beneath his pulpit. Soon after he assumed the sacerdotal office, Chrysostom was placed in an extraordinary position as the representative of the bishop.

In one of those sudden tumultuous insurrections A. D. 387. which take place among the populace of large cities, Antioch had resisted the exorbitant demands of a new taxation, maltreated the imperial officers, and thrown down and dragged about, with every kind of insult, the statues of Theodosius, his empress, and their two sons.* The stupor of fear succeeded to this momentary outbreak of mutiny. which had been quelled by a single troop of archers. For days the whole people awaited in shuddering agitation the sentence of the Emperor. The anger of Theodosius was terrible; he had not yet, it is true, ordered the massacre of the whole population of Thessalonica, but his stern and relentless charac-

μιος δαίμων, έπραξεν, α σιωπάν

ter was too well known. Dark rumours spread abroad that he had threatened to burn Antioch, to exterminate its inhabitants, and to pass the ploughshare over its ruins. Multitudes fled destitute from the city; others remained shut up in their houses, for fear of being seized. Instead of the forum crowded with thousands, one or two persons were seen timidly wandering about. The gay and busy Antioch had the appearance of a captured and depopulated city. The theatres, the circus, were closed; no marriage song was heard; even In the meantime the the schools were shut up. government resumed its unlimited and unresisted authority, which it administered with the sternest severity, and rigorous inquisition into the guilt of individuals. The prisons were thronged with ciminals of every rank and station; confiscation swept away their wealth, punishments of every degree were inflicted on their persons. the highest rank were ignominiously scourged; those who confessed their guilt were put to the sword, burned alive, or thrown to the wild beasts? Chrysostom's description of the agony of those days is in the highest style of dramatic oratory. Women of the highest rank, brought up with the utmost delicacy, and accustomed to every luxury, were seen crowding around the gates, or in the outer judgment hall, unattended, repelled by the rude soldiery, but still clinging to the doors of prostrate on the ground, listening to the clash of Liban. ad Theod. in fin.

 † Chrysostom asserts this in a fine passage, in which he reminds his hearers of their greater offences α against God. Kal ol μὶν κότρι, οἱ δὲ Ͽηρίος παροδο θέντες ἀπώλοντο. Hom. ii. 6.
 με αποδορίτητες ἀπώλοντο.
 με αποδορίτητες
the scourges, the shrieks of the tortured victims, and the shouts of the executioners; one minute supposing that they recognised the familiar voices of fathers, husbands, or brothers; or trembling lest those who were undergoing torture should denounce their relatives and friends. Chrysostom passes from this scene, by a bold but natural transition, to the terrors of the final judgment, and the greater agony of that day.

Now was the time to put to the test the power of Christianity, and to ascertain whether the orthodox opinions of Theodosius were altogether independent of that humanity which is the essence of the Gospel. Would the Christian Emperor listen to the persuasive supplications of the Christian prelate — that prelate for whose character he had expressed the highest respect?

While Flavianus, the aged and feeble bishop, Flavianus quitting the bedside of his dying sister, set forth on to intercedo his pious mission to the West, on Chrysostom devolved the duty of assuaging the fears, of administering consolation, and of profiting by this state of stupor and dejection to correct the vices and enforce serious thoughts upon the light and dissolute Day after day he ascended the pulpit; people. the whole population, deserting the forum, forgetting the theatre and the circus, thronged the churches. There was even an attendance (an unusual circumstance) after the hour of dinner. The whole city became a church. There is wonderful skill and judgment in the art with which the orator employs the circumstances of the time for his purpose; in the manner in which he allays the terror, without too highly encouraging the hopes, of the people: "The clemency of the Emperor may forgive their guilt, but the Christians ought to be superior to the fear of death; they cannot be secure of pardon in this world, but they may be secure of immortality in the world to come."

CHAP.

sets forth for mercy.

Sentence of Theododus. Long before the success of the bishop's intercession could be known, the delegates of the Emperor, Hellabichus and Cæsarius, arrived with the sentence of Theodosius, which was merciful, if compared with what they had feared,—the destruction of the city, and the massacre of its inhabitants. But it was fatal to the pleasures, the comforts, the pride of Antioch. The theatres and the circus were to be closed; Antioch was no longer to enjoy theatrical representations of any kind; the baths, in an Eastern city not objects of luxury alone, but of cleanliness and health, were to be shut; and Antioch was degraded from the rank of a metropolitan city, to a town under the jurisdiction of Laodicea.

The city was in the deepest depression, but Chrysostom maintained his lofty tone of consolation. Antioch ought to rejoice at the prohibition of those scenes of vice and dissipation, which disgraced the theatres: the baths tended to effect nacy and luxury; they were disdained by true philosophy—the monastic system; the dignity of the city did not depend on its rank in the empire, but on the virtue of its citizens; it might be a heavenly, if no longer an earthly, metropolis.

The inquisition into the guilt of those who had CHAP. ctually assisted, or had looked on in treasonable. idifference, while the statues of the Emperor and is family were treated with such unseemly conumely, had commenced under the regular authoities; it was now carried on with stern and indisriminate impartiality. The prisoners were crowded ogether in a great open enclosure, in one close md agonising troop, which comprehended the whole senate of the city. The third day of the inquiry was to witness the execution of the guilty, and no one, not the relatives or kindred of the wealthiest, the noblest, or the highest in station, knew whether the doom had not fallen on their fathers or husbands.

But Hellabichus and Cæsarius were men of humanity, and ventured to suspend the execution of the sentence. They listened to the supplications of the people. One mother, especially, seized and clung to the reins of the horse of Hellabichus. The monks who, while the philosophers, as Chrysostom asserts, had fled the city, had poured down rom their mountain solitudes, and during the whole ime had endeavoured to assuage the fear of the eople, and to awaken the compassion of the go-'ernment, renewed, not without effect, their pious They crowded round the tribunal, and one, named Macedonius, was so courageous as boldly to remonstrate against the crime of avenging he destruction of a few images of brass by the lestruction of the image of God in so many human beings. Cæsarius himself undertook a journey to Constantinople for farther instructions.

* Chrysostom, Hom. xvii, vol. ii. p. 172.

interview of Flavianus with the Em-

At length Chrysostom had the satisfaction to announce to the people the return of the bishop with an act of unlimited amnesty. He described Issue of the the interview of Flavianus with the Emperor; his silence, his shame, his tears, when Theodosius gently reminded him of his benefactions to the city, which enhanced their heinous ingratitude. reply of Flavianus, though the orator professes to relate it on the authority of one present at the interview, is no doubt coloured by the eloquence of Chrysostom. The Bishop acknowledged the guilt of the city in the most humiliating language. he urged, that the greater that guilt, the greater would be the magnanimity of the Emperor if he He would raise statues, not of should pardon it. perishable materials, in the hearts of all mankind. It is not the glory of Theodosius, he proceeded, bu Christianity itself, which is put to the test before The Jews and Greeks, even the mos remote barbarians, are anxiously watching whethe this sentence will be that of Christian clemency -How will they all glorify the Christian's God if he shall restrain the wrath of the master of the worldand subdue him to that humanity which would be magnanimous even in a private man. Inexorable= punishment might awe other cities into obedience but mercy would attach mankind by the stronge bonds of love. It would be an imperishable example of clemency, and all future acts of other sovereigns would be but the fruit of this, and would reflect their glory on Theodosius. What glory to concede that to a single aged priest, from the fear, of God, which he had refused to all other suppliants. For himself, Flavianus could never bear to return to his native city; he would remain an exile, until that city was reconciled with the Emperor. Theodosius, it is said, called to mind the prayer of the Saviour for his enemies, and satisfied his wounded pride, that in his mercy he imitated his Redeemer. He was even anxious that Flavianus should return to announce the full pardon before the festival of Easter. "Let the Gentiles." exclaims the ardent preacher, "be confounded, or rather, let them be instructed by this unexampled instance of imperial clemency and episcopal influence." *

Theodosius had ceased to reign many years be- A. D. 398. fore Chrysostom was summoned to the pontifical bishop of throne of Constantinople. The East was governed tinople. by women and eunuchs. In assuming the episcopal throne of the metropolis, to which he is said to have been transported almost by force, Chrysostom, who could not but be conscious of his power over the minds of men, might entertain visions of the noblest and purest ambition. His views of the dignity of the sacerdotal character were as lofty as those of his cotemporaries in the West; while he asserted their authority, which set them apart and far above the rest of mankind, he demanded a moral superiority, and entire devotion to their calling, which could not but ^{*} Chrysostom had ventured to assert —"Απερ δυδενὶ ἐτέρψ, ταῦτα χαραίται τοῖς ἱερεῦσι. Hom. xxi. 3.

BOOK 11L rivet their authority upon the minds of men. The clergy, such as his glowing imagination conceived them, would unite the strongest corporate spirit with the highest individual zeal and purity. The influence of the bishop in Antioch, the deference which Theodosius had shown to the intercession of Favianus, might encourage Chrysostom in the fallacious hope of restoring peace, virtue, and piety, as well as orthodoxy, in the imperial city.

Difference of the sacerdotal power in Rome and Constantinople

But in the East, more particularly in the metropolis, the sacerdotal character never assumed the unassailable sanctity, the awful inviolability, which it attained in the West. The religion of Constantinople was that of the Emperor. Instead of growing up, like the Bishop of Rome, first to independence, afterwards to sovereignty, the presence of the imperial government overawed and obscured the religious supremacy. In Rome, the Pope was subject at times to the rebellious control of the aristocracy, or exposed to the irreverent fury of the populace; but he constantly emerged from his transient obscurity, and resumed his power. Constantinople, a voluptuous court, a savage popu lace, at this period multitudes of concealed Arian = and heretics of countless shades and hues at all pe riods, thwarted the plans, debased the dignity, an desecrated the person of the Patriarch of Constant tinople.

In some respects, Chrysostom's character wanted the peculiar, and perhaps inconsistent qualification requisite for his position. He was the preached but not the man of the world. A great capital is apt to demand that magnificence in its prelate at which it murmurs. It will not respect less than splendid state and the show of authority, while at the same time it would have the severest austerity and the strongest display of humility,—the pomp of the Pontiff with the poverty and lowliness of the Apostle. Chrysostom carried the asceticism of the monk not merely into his private chamber, but into his palace and his hall. The great prelates of the West, when it was expedient, could throw off the monk and appear statesmen or as nobles in their public transactions; though this, indeed, was much less necessary than in Constantinople. But Chrysostom cherished all these habits with zealous, perhaps with ostentatious, fidelity. Instead of munificent hospitality, he took his scanty meal in his solitary chamber. His rigid economy endured none of that episcopal sumptuousness with which his predecessor Nectarius had dazzled the public eye: he proscribed all the carpets, all silken dresses; he sold the costly furniture and the rich vessels of his residence; he Was said even to have retrenched from the church some of its gorgeous plate, and to have sold some rich marbles and furniture designed for the Anastasia. He was lavish, on the other hand, in his expenditure on the hospitals and charitable institu-But even the use to which they were ap-Plied, did not justify to the general feeling the alienation of those ornaments from the service of the church. The populace, who, no doubt, in their hours of discontent, had contrasted the magnificence of Nectarius with apostolical poverty, were

IX ·

II. ical ulties now offended by the apostolical poverty of Chryso-tom, which seemed unworthy of his lofty station.

forof the y in tr

But the Bishop of Constantinople had even a more difficult task in prescribing to himself the limits of his interference with secular affairs. easy to imagine, in the clergy, a high and serene indifference to the political tumults of society. This is perpetually demanded by those who find the sacerdotal influence adverse to their own views; but to the calm inquirer, this simple question becomes the most difficult and intricate problem in religious If religion consisted solely in the interhistory. course between man and his Creator; if the Christian minister were merely the officiating functionary in the ceremonial of the church, — the human mediator between the devotion of man and the providence of God, - the voice which expresses the common adoration. — the herald who announces the general message of revelation to mankind, -nothing could be more clear than the line which might exclude him from all political, or even all worldly affairs. But Christianity is likewise a moral power; and as that moral power or guide, religion, and the minister of religion, cannot refrain from interposital in all questions of human conduct; as the interpreter of the divine law to the perplexed and doub ing conscience, it cannot but spread its dominio over the whole field of human action. In this character, religion embraced the whole life of man: public as well as private. How was the minister of that religion to pause and discriminate as to the extent of his powers, particularly since the public acts of the most eminent in station possessed such unlimited influence over the happiness of society, and even the eternal welfare of the whole community? What public misconduct was not at the same time an unchristian act? Were the clergy, by connivance, to become accomplices in vices which they did not endeavour to counteract? Christianity on the throne, as in the cottage, was equally bound to submit on every point in which religious motive or principle ought to operate, in every act, therefore, of life, to the admitted restraints of the Gospel; and the general feeling of Christianity at this period had invested the clergy with the right, or nther the duty, of enforcing the precepts of the Gospel on every professed believer. How, then, were the clergy to distinguish between the individual and political capacity of the man; to respect the prince, yet to advise the Christian; to look with indifference on one set of actions as secular. to admonish on the danger of another as affairs of conscience?

CHAP. IX.

Nor at this early period of its still aggressive, still consciously beneficial influence, could the hierarchy be expected to anticipate with coldly prophetic prudence the fatal consequence of some of its own encroachments on worldly authority. The bishop of a great capital was the conductor, the representative, of the moral power of the Gospel, which was perpetually striving to obtain its ascendancy over brute force, violence, and vice; and of necessity, perhaps, was not always cautious or discreet in the means to which it resorted. It became contaminated in the incessant strife, and forgot its end, or rather sought for the mastery, as its end, rather than as the legitimate means of promoting its beneficial Under the full, and no doubt, at first, warrantable persuasion, that it was advancing the happiness and virtue of mankind, where should it arrest its own course, or set limits to its own humanising and improving interpositions? Thus, under the constant temptation of assuming, as far as possible, the management of affairs which were notoriously mismanaged through the vices of public men, the administration even of public matters by the clergy might seem, to them at least, to insure iustice, disinterestedness, and clemency: till tried by the possession of power, they would be the last to discern the danger of being invested in that power.

Eutropius the eunuch. The first signal interposition of Chrysostom in the political affairs of Constantinople was an act not merely of humanity but of gratitude. Eutropius the eunuch, minister of the feeble Arcadius, is condemned to immortal infamy by the vigorous satire of Claudian. Among his few good deeds, had been the advancement of Chrysostom to the see of Constantinople. Eutropius had found it necessary to restrict the right of asylum, which began to be generally claimed by all the Christian churches, little foreseeing that to the bold assertion of that right he would owe his life.

Right of

There is something sublime in the first notion of the right of asylum. It is one of those institutions based in the universal religious sentiment of

; it is found in almost all religions. In the ek, as in the Jewish, man took refuge from the geance, often from the injustice, of his fellow i, in the presence of the gods. Not merely rate revenge, but the retributive severity of the , stands rebuked before the dignity of the divine rt, in which the criminal has lodged his appeal. e lustrations in the older religions, the rites of iation and reconciliation performed in many of temples, the appellations of certain deities, as reconcilers or pacifiers of man *, were enwoven h their mythology, and embodied in their poetry. t Christianity, in a still higher and more universense, might assume to take under its protection, order to amend and purify, the outcast of soty, whom human justice followed with relentless As the representative of the God of rcy, it excluded no human being from the pale of entance, and would protect them, when disposed that salutary change, if it could possibly be made isistent with the public peace and safety. rciful intervention of the clergy between the minal and his sentence, at a period when the laws re so implacable and sanguinary, was at once conent with Christian charity, and tended to some tigation of the ferocious manners of the age. ve time at least for exasperated justice to reconer its sentence, and checked that vindictive imlse, which if it did not outrup the law, turned it o instantaneous and irrevocable execution.† But

The αποτροπαιοί, or averrun-

Greek, there is an elaborate argument, that if the right of asylum In a law which is extant in had been granted by the Heathen

BOOK that which commenced in pure benevolence had already, it should seem, begun to degenerate into a source of power. The course of justice was impeded, but not by a wise discrimination between the more or less heinous delinquents, or a salutary penitential system, which might reclaim the guilty. and safely restore him to society.

A. D. 399.

Like other favourites of arbitrary sovereigns, Eutropius was suddenly precipitated from the height of power; the army forced the sentence of his dismissal from the timid Emperor, and the furious populace, as usual, thirsted for the blood of him to whose unbounded sway they had so long submitted in humble obedience. Eutropius fled in haste to that asylum, the sanctity of which had been limited by his own decree; and the courage and influence of Chrysostom protected that most forlorn of human beings, the discarded favourite of a despot. The armed soldiery and the raging populace were met at the door of the church by the defenceless ecclesiastic: his demeanour and the sanctity of the place arrested the blind fury of the assailants; Chrysostom before the Emperor pleaded the cause of Eutropius with the same fearless freedom, and for once the life of a fallen minister was > to their altars, and to the statues of the Emperors, it ought to belong to the temples of God.

Chrysostom saves the life of Eutropius.

See the laws which defined the right of asylum, Cod. Theodos. ix. 45. 3. et seqq. The sacred space extended to the outer gates of the church. But those who took refuge in the church were on no account to be permitted to profane the holy building itself by eating or sleeping within it. "Quibus si perfuga non adnuit, neque consentit, præferenda ha-manitati religio est." There was a strong prohibition against introducing arms into the churches; a prohibition which the Emperors themselves did not scruple to violate on more than one occasion.

spared, his sentence was commuted for banishment. His fate indeed was only delayed, he was afterwards brought back from Cyprus, his place of exile. and beheaded at Chalcedon.

But with all his courage, his eloquence, his moral dignity, Chrysostom, instead of establishing a firm and permanent authority over Constantinople, became himself the victim of intrigue and jealousy. Besides his personal habits and manners, the character of Chrysostom, firm on great occasions, and eminently persuasive when making a general address to the multitude, was less commanding and authoritative in his constant daily intercourse with the various orders: calm and self-possessed as an orator, he was accused of being passionate and overbearing in ordinary business: the irritability of feeble health may have caused some part of this infirmity. Men, whose minds, like that of Chrysostom, are centered on one engrossing object, are apt to abandon the details of business to others, who thus become necessary to them, and at length, if artful and dextrous, rule them with inextricable sway: they have much knowledge of mankind, little practical acquaintance with individual men. Thus, Chrysostom was com- Chrysostom pletely governed by his deacon Serapion, who by his managed his affairs, and like all men of address in deacon such stations, while he exercised all the power, and secured the solid advantages, left the odium and responsibility upon his master. On the whole, the character of Chrysostom retained something of the unworldly monastic enthusiasm, and wanted

CHRISTIANITY.

decided wisdom, when compared, for Ambrose in the West, and thus powerfully contributed to his fall.* But the circumstances of his situation might | Ambrose himself. All orders conspired against him. The court w at endure the grave and severe censor; the cl shelled against the rigour of the prelate's d the populace, though when under the this eloquence, fondly attached to his person doubt, in general resented his implacable conde sion of their amusements. The Arians, to wh his uncompromising zeal, he had persuaded Emperor to refuse a single church, though manded by the most powerful subject of the em Gainas the Goth, were still no doubt sec nowerful. A Pagan præfect, Optatus, seized opportunity of wreaking his animosity tow Christianity itself, upon its powerful advo some wealthy females are named as resenting severe condemnation of their dress and manne

Of all these adversaries, the most dangerous most persevering, and the most implacable, those of his own order and his own rank.‡ secerdotal authority in the East was undermine its own divisions. The imperial power, which, is Chrysostom's character is brought ent perhaps with more than impartiality by the ecclesiastical historian Sozomen, who wrote at Constantinople, and may have preserved much of the hostile tradition relating to him.

[†] Tillemont, p. 180. † The good Tillemont conthis humiliating truth with and reluctance. Vie de Cl tome, p. 181.

ands of a violent, and not irreproachable woman, he Empress Eudoxia, might, perhaps, have quailed. refore the energy of a blameless and courageous relate, allied itself with one section of the church, nd so secured its triumph over the whole. nore Chrysostom endeavoured to carry out by episxpal authority those exalted notions of the sacerlotal character, which he had developed in his work pon the priesthood, the more he estranged many if his natural supporters. He visited the whole of Asia Minor; degraded bishops; exposed with unparing indignation the vices and venality of the ergy; and involved them all in one indiscriminate charge of simony and licentiousness. The assumption of this authority was somewhat questionable; the severity with which it was exercised did not reconcile the reluctant province to submission. Among the malcontent clergy, four bishops took the lead; but the head of this unrelenting faction Was Theophilus, the violent and unscrupulous Pre- Theophilus The apparently trivial causes of Alexandria. late of Alexandria. which inflamed the hostility of Theophilus confirm a suspicion, previously suggested, that the rivalry of the two principal sees in the East mingled with the personal animosity of Theophilus against the Bishop of Constantinople. Chrysostom had been accused of extending his jurisdiction beyond its legitimate bounds. Certain monks of Nitria had fled from the persecutions of Theophilus, and taken refuge in Constantinople; and Chrysostom had extended his countenance, if not his protection, to hese revolted subjects of the Alexandrian prelate;

but he had declined to take legal cognisance of the dispute as a superior prelate, or as the head of a council; partly, he states*, out of respect for Theophilus, partly because he was unwilling to interfere in the affairs of another province. Theophilus was not so scrupulous; he revenged himself for the supposed invasion of his own province by a most daring inroad on that of his rival. He assumed for the Patriarch of Alexandria the right of presiding over the Eastern bishops, and of summoning the Bishop of Constantinople before this irregular tribunal. Theophilus, with the sanction, if not by the invitation, of the Empress, landed at Constantinople. He was accompanied by a band of Alexandrian mariners, as a protection against the populace of the city.

Council of the Oak. The council was held, not in Constantinople, but at a place called the Oak, in the suburbs of Chalcedon. It consisted for the most part of Egyptian bishops, under the direct influence of Theophilus, and of Asiatic prelates, the personal enemies of Chrysostom.† For fourteen days it held its sessions, and received informations, which gradually grew into twenty nine grave and specific charges. Four times was Chrysostom summoned to appear before this self-appointed tribunal, of which it was impossible for him to recognise the legal authority. In the meantime, he was not inactive in his peculiar sphere—the pulpit. Unfortunately, the authenticity of the sermon ascribed to him at this period is not altogether certain, nor the time at which some extant discourses, if genuine, were delivered, conclusively settled. One, however, bears strong indications of the manner and sentiments of Chrysostom; and it is generally acknowledged that he either did boldly use, or was accused of using, language full of contumelious allusion to the Empress. This sermon, therefore, if not an accurate report of his expressions, may convey the sense of what he actually uttered, or which was attributed to him by his adversaries.* "The billows," said the energetic prelate, "are mighty, and the storm furious; but we fear not to be wrecked, for we are founded on a rock. What can I fear? Death? To me to live is Christ, and to die is gain. Exile? The earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof. Confiscation? We brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out of it. I scorn the terrors, and smile at the advantages, of life. I fear not death. I desire to live only for your profit. The church against which you strive, dashes away your assaults into idle foam. It is fixed by God.

^{*} Epist. ad Innocentium Papam, vol. iii. p. 516. † It is contested whether there were thirty or forty-six bishops.

It is singularly characteristic of the Christianity of the times to observe the charges against which Chrysostom protests with the greatest vehemence; and this part of the oration in question is confirmed by one of his letters to Cyriacus. Against that of personal impurity with a female, he calmly offers the most unquestionable evidence. But he was likewise accused of having administered baptism after he had eaten. On this he breaks out:—" If I have done this, Anathema upon me, may I be no longer counted among bishops, nor be admitted among the angels accepted of God." He was said to have administered the sacrament to those who had in like manner broken their fast. "If I have done so, may I be rejected of Christ." He then justifies himself, even if guilty, by the example of Paul, and even of Christ himself, but still seems to look on this breach of discipline with the utmost horror.

CHAP. IX. BOOK IIL who shall revoke it? The church is stronger than Heaven itself! Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away. * * * know, my brethren, the true cause of my ruin. Because I have not strewn rich carpets on my floors, nor clothed myself in silken robes; because I have discountenanced the sensuality of certain persons. The seed of the serpent is still alive, but grace is still on the side of Elijah." Then follows in obscure and embarrassed language, as though, if genuine, the preacher were startled at his own boldness, an allusion to the fate of John the Baptist, and to the hostility of Herodias: - "It is a time of wailing - lo, all things tend to disgrace; but time judgeth all things." The fatal word, "disgrace," (ἀδοξία) was supposed to be an allusion to Eudoxia, the Empress.

Condemnation of Chrysos-tom.

There was a secret understanding between the court and the council. The court urged the proceedings of the council, and the council pronounced the sentence of deposition, but left to the court to take cognisance of the darker charge of high tresson, of which they asserted Chrysostom to be guilty, but which was beyond their jurisdiction. leged treason was the personal insult to the Empress Eudoxia, which was construed into exciting the people to rebellion. But the execution of this sentence embarrassed the council and the irresolute government. Chrysostom now again ruled the popular mind with unbounded sway. It would have been dangerous to have seized him in the church, environed, as he constantly was, by crowds of admiring hearers, whom a few fervent words might have maddened into insurrection.

Chrysostom, however, shrunk, whether from Chrysost timidity or Christian peacefulness of disposition, leaves Constanting from being the cause, even innocently, of tumult He had neither the ambition, the and bloodshed. desperate recklessness, nor perhaps the resolution. of a demagogue. He would not be the Christian tribune of the people. He seized the first opportunity of the absence of his hearers quietly to surrender himself to the imperial officers. cautiously transported by night, though the jealous populace crowded the streets, in order to release their prelate from the hands of his enemies, to the opposite side of the Bosphorus, and confined in a villa on the Bithynian shore.

The triumph of Chrysostom's enemies was complete. Theophilus entered the city, and proceeded to wreak his vengeance on the partisans of his adversary; the Empress rejoiced in the conscious assurance of her power; the people were overawed into gloomy and sullen silence.

The night of the following day, strange and aw- Earthful sounds were heard throughout the city. palace, the whole of Constantinople, shook with an earthquake. The Empress, as superstitious as she was violent, when she felt her chamber rock beneath her, shuddering at the manifest wrath of Heaven, fell on her knees, and entreated the Emperor to revoke the fatal sentence. She wrote a hasty letter, disclaiming all hostility to the banished prelate, and protesting that she was "innocent of his blood."

Return of ChrysosThe next day, the palace was surrounded by morous multitudes, impatiently demanding hi The voice of the people and the voic God seemed to join in the vindication of Chr tom. The edict of recall was issued; the phorus swarmed with barks, eager to commun the first intelligence, and to obtain the honor bringing back the guardian and the pride of the He was met on his arrival by the whole popula men, women, and children; all who could, torches in their hands, and hymns of thanksgive composed for the occasion, were chaunted be him, as he proceeded to the great church. enemies fled on all sides. Soon after. Theoph on the demand of a free council, left Con tinople, at the dead of night, and embarked Alexandria.

There is again some doubt as to the authent of the first discourse delivered by Chrysoston this occasion, — none of the second. But the was an extemporaneous address, to which the tant speech appears to correspond. "What I say? Blessed be God! These were my words on my departure, these the first on m turn. Blessed be God! because he permitted storm to rage; Blessed be God! because he allayed it. Let my enemies behold how their spiracy has advanced my peace, and redounde my glory. Before, the church alone was crow now, the whole forum is become a church. games are celebrating in the circus, but the w people pour like a torrent to the church.

prayers in my behalf are more glorious than a diadem, — the prayers both of men and women; for in Christ there is neither male nor female."

CHAP.

In the second oration he draws an elaborate comparison between the situation of Abraham in Egypt and his own. The barbarous Egyptian (this struck, no doubt, at Theophilus) had endeavoured to defile his Sarah, the church of Constantinople; but the faithful church had remained, by the power of God, uncontaminated by this rebuked Abimelech. He dwelt with pardonable pride on the faithful attachment of his followers. They had conquered; but how? by prayer and submission. The enemy had brought arms into the sanctuary, they had prayed; like a spider's web the enemy had been scattered, they remained firm as a rock. The Empress herself had joined the triumphal procession, when the sea became, as the city, covered with all ranks, all ages, and both sexes.*

But the peace and triumph of Chrysostom were not lasting. As the fears of the Empress were allayed, the old feeling of hatred to the Bishop, embittered by the shame of defeat, and the constant suspicion that either the preacher or his audience Pointed at her his most vigorous declamation, rankled in the mind of Eudoxia. It had become a strife for ascendancy, and neither could recede with safety and honour. Opportunities could not but occur to enrage and exasperate; nor would ill-

^{*} Chrysostom, in both these stantinople took great interest in discourses, states a curious cirhis cause. cumstance, that the Jews of Con-disposed persons be wanting to inflame the passions of the Empress, by misrepresenting and personally applying the bold and indignant language of the prelate.

Statue of the Em-

A statue of the Empress was about to be erected: and on these occasions of public festival the people were wont to be indulged in dances, pantomimes, and every kind of theatrical amusement. of Chrysostom was always especially directed against these idolatrous amusements, which often, he confesses, drained the church of his hearers. This, now ill-timed, zeal was especially awakened, because the statue was to be erected, and the rejoicings to take place, in front of the entrance to the great church, the St. Sophia. His denunciations were construed into personal insults to the Empress; she threatened a new council. prelate threw off the remaining restraints of prudence; repeated more explicitly the allusion which he had before but covertly hinted. He thundered out a homily, with the memorable exordium, "Herodias is maddening, Herodias is dancing, Herodias demands the head of John." If Chrysostom could even be suspected of such daring outrage against the temporal sovereign; if he ventured on language approaching to such unmeasured hostility; it was manifest that either the imperial authority must quail and submit to the sacerdotal domination, or employ, without scruple, its power to crush the bold usurpation.

Second condemnation

An edict of the Emperor suspended the prelate of Chrysos- from his functions. Though forty-two bishops adhered, with inflexible fidelity, to his cause, he was condemned by a second hostile council, not on any new charge, but for contumacy, in resisting the decrees of the former assembly, and for a breach of the ecclesiastical laws, in resuming his authority while under the condemnation of a council.

The soldiers of the Emperor were more danger- A. D. 404. ous enemies than the prelates. In the midst of the in the solemn celebration of Good Friday, in the great church. church of Santa Sophia, the military forced their way, not merely into the nave, but up to the altar. on which were placed the consecrated elements. Many were trodden under foot; many wounded by the swords of the soldiers; the clergy were dragged to prison; some females, who were about to be baptized, were obliged to fly with their disordered apparel: the waters of the font were stained with blood; the soldiers pressed up to the altar; seized the sacred vessels as their plunder: the sacred elements were scattered about; their garments were bedewed with the blood of the Redeemer.* Constantinople for several days had the appearance of a city which had been stormed. Wherever the partisans of Chrysostom were assembled, they were assaulted and dispersed by the soldiery; females were exposed to insult, and one frantic attempt was made to assassinate the prelate. †

Chrysostom at length withdrew from the confest;

^{} Chrysostom, Epist. ad Innocentium, c. iii. v. iii. p. 519. Chrysostom exempts the Emperor from all share in this out-he escaped from the friendly custody of his adherents, and surrendered himself to the imperial He was immediately conveyed by night officers. to the Asiatic shore. At the instant of his departure, another fearful calamity agitated the public mind. The church which he left, burst into flames, and the conflagration, said to have first broken out in the episcopal throne, reached the roof of the building, and spread from thence to the senatehouse. These two magnificent edifices, the latter of which contained some noble specimens of ancient art, became in a few hours a mass of ruins. partisans of Chrysostom, and Chrysostom himself, were, of course, accused of this act, the author of which was never discovered, and in which no life But the bishop was charged with the was lost. horrible design of destroying his enemies in the church; his followers were charged with the guilt of incendiarism with a less atrocious object, that no bishop after Chrysostom might be seated in his pontifical throne.

Chrysostom

The prelate was not permitted to choose his place of exile. The peaceful spots which might have been found in the more genial climate of Bithynia, or the adjacent provinces, would have been too near the capital. He was transported to Cucusus, a small town in the mountainous and ^{*} There are three laws in the "qui sacrilego animo auctorita-

Theodosian Code against unlaw-ful and seditious meetings (conventicula), directed against the followers of Chrysostom,—the Joannitæ, as they were called, savage district of Armenia. On his journey thither of several days, he suffered much from fever and lisquiet of mind, and from the cruelty of the officer who commanded the guard.

Yet his influence was not extinguished by his His ibsence. The Eastern Church was almost governed from the solitary cell of Chrysostom. He corresponded with all quarters; women of rank and opulence sought his solitude in disguise. The bishops of many distant sees sent him assistance, and coveted his advice. The Bishop of Rome received his letters with respect, and wrote back ardent commendations of his patience. The exile of Cucusus exercised perhaps more extensive authority than the Patriarch of Constantinople.*

He was not, however, permitted to remain in peace in this miserable seclusion: sometimes his life was endangered by the invasions of the Isaurian marauders; and he was obliged to take refuge in a neighbouring fortress, named Ardissa. couraged his ardent disciples with the hope, the assurance, of his speedy return; but he miscalculated the obstinate and implacable resentment of his persecutors. At length an order came to remove

* Among his letters may be remarked those written to the celebrated Olympias. This wealthy widow, who had refused the solicitations or commands of Theodosius to marry one of his fa-vourites, had almost washed away, by her austerities and virtues, the stain of her nuptials, and might rank in Christian estimation with those unsullied virgins who had never been contaminated by marriage. She was the friend of all riage. See was the friend of all the distinguished and orthodox clergy,—of Gregory of Nazianzum, and of Chrysostom. Chrysostom records to her praise, that by her austerities, she had brought on an infall disease. painful diseases, which baffled the art of medicine. Chrysost. Epist. viii. p. 540.

him to Pityus, on the Euxine, a still more savage place on the verge of the empire. He died on the journey, near Comana, in Pontus.

His remains tran ported to Constantinople. Some years afterwards, the remains of Chrysostom were transported to Constantinople with the utmost reverence, and received with solemn pomp. Constantinople, and the imperial family, submitted with eager zeal to worship as a saint him whom they would not endure as a prelate.

The remarkable part in the whole of this persecution of Chrysostom is that it arose not out of difference of doctrine, or polemic hostility. charge of heresy darkened the pure fame of the great Christian orator. His persecution had not the dignity of conscientious bigotry; it was a struggle for power between the temporal and ecclesiastical supremacy; but the passions and the personal animosities of ecclesiastics, the ambition, and perhaps the jealousy of the Alexandrian Patriarch, as to jurisdiction, lent themselves to the degradation of the episcopal authority in Constantinople, from which it never rose. No doubt the choleric temper, the overstrained severity, the monastic habits, the ambition to extend his authority, perhaps beyond its legitimate bounds, and the indiscreet zeal of Chrysostom, laid him open to his adversaries; but in any other station, in the episcopate of any other city, these infirmities would have been lost in the splendour of his talents and his virtues. Though he might not have weaned the general mass of the people from their vices, or their amusements, which he proscribed with equal severity, yet he would have commanded general CHAP. respect; and nothing less than a schism, arising out of religious difference, would have shaken or impaired his authority.

At all events, the fall of Chrysostom was an inauspicious omen, and a warning which might repress the energy of future prelates; and, doubtless, the issue of this conflict materially tended to degrade the office of the chief bishop in the Eastern empire. It may be questioned whether the proximity of the court, and such a court as that of the East. would, under any circumstances, have allowed the episcopate to assume its legitimate power, far less to have encroached on the temporal sovereignty. But after this time, the Bishop of Constantinople almost sank into a high officer of state; appointed by the influence, if not directly nominated by the Emperor, his gratitude was bound to reverence, or his prudence to dread, that arbitrary power which had raised him from nothing, and might dismiss him to his former insignificance. Except on some rare occasions, he bowed with the rest of the empire before the capricious will of the sovereign or the ruling favourite; he was content if the Em-Peror respected the outward ceremonial of the church, and did not openly espouse any heretical doctrine.

Christianity thus remained, in some respects, an antagonist principle, counteracting by its perpetual remonstrance, and rivalling by its attractive ceremonial, the vices and licentious diversions of the capital; but its moral authority was not allied with power; it quailed under the universal despotism, and was entirely inefficient as a corrective of imperial tyranny. It thus escaped the evils inseparable from the undue elevation of the sacerdotal character, and the temptations to encroach beyond its proper limits on the civil power; but it likewise gradually sank far below that uncompromising independence, that venerable majesty, which might impose some restraint on the worst excesses of violence, and infuse justice and humanity into the manners of the court and of the people.

CHAP. X.

CHAP. X.

THE GREAT PRELATES OF THE WEST.

character and the fate of Ambrose offer the Ambrose est contrast with that of Chrysostom. Amorphished Ambrose of Milan. Was no dreaming solitary brought up in the ion of the desert, or among a fraternity of the us husbandmen. He had been versed in pusiness from his youth; he had already ed a high station in the Imperial service. oquence had little of the richness, imaginatively, or dramatic power of the Grecian; hard but vigorous, it was Roman, forensic, cal — we mean where it related to affairs of iss, or addressed men in general; it has, as we hereafter observe, a very different character is of his theological writings.

Ambrose the sacerdotal character assumed a y and an influence as yet unknown; it first to confront the throne, not only on terms of ty, but of superior authority, and to exercise tual dictatorship over the supreme magistrate. esistance of Athanasius to the Imperial aurhad been firm but deferential, passive than aggressive. In his public addresses he espected the majesty of the empire; at all, the hierarchy of that period only questioned thority of the sovereign in matters of faith.

Ambrose the episcopal power acknowledged.

no limits to its moral dominion, and admitted on distinction of persons. While the bishops of Rome were comparatively without authority, and still partially obscured by the concentration of Paganism in the aristocracy of the Capitol, the Archbishop of Milan began to develop papal power and papal imperiousness. Ambrose was the spiritual ancestor of the Hildebrands and the Innocents. Chrysostom, Ambrose had to strive against the passionate animosity of an empress, not merely exasperated against him by his suspected disrespect and disobedience, but by the bitterness of religious difference. Yet how opposite the result! And Ambrose had to assert his religious authority, not against the feeble Arcadius, but against his father, the great Theodosius. We cannot indeed but recognise something of the undegraded Roman of the West in Ambrose; Chrysostom has something of the feebleness and degeneracy of the Byzantine.

Youth of Ambrose.

The father of Ambrose, who bore the same name, had administered the province of Gaul, as prætorian prefect. The younger Ambrose, while pursuing his studies at Rome, had attracted the notice of Probus, prætorian prefect of Italy. Ambrose, through his influence, was appointed to the administration of the provinces of Æmilia and Liguria.* Probus was a Christian, and his parting admonition to the young civilian was couched in these prophetic words—"Rule the province,

HERE BUNDER STREET

^{*} Chiefly from the life of Ambrose affixed to the Benedictine Paulinus; and Tillemont.

i judge, but as a bishop."* Milan was ne department assigned to Ambrose. This now begun almost to rival or eclipse is the capital of the Occidental empire, the celebrity of its schools it was called ns of the West. The Church of Milan with divisions. On a vacancy caused by 1 of Auxentius, the celebrated Arian, the ies, the Arian and the Athanasian, viontested the appointment of the bishop. ose appeared in his civil character to allay Ambrose lt, by the awe of his presence, and by the A. D. 374. e force of his eloquence. He spoke so id in such a Christian spirit, that a general on suddenly broke forth, "Ambrose, be -Ambrose, be bishop." Ambrose was yet atechumen; he attempted in every way, ing a severe character as a magistrate, and to elude the unexpected honour.† The 'the people, and the approbation of the t, compelled him to assume the office. cast off at once the pomp and majesty of tate; but that which was in some degree ageous to Chrysostom, his severe simf life, only increased the admiration and nt of the less luxurious, or at least less e, West, to their pious prelate: for Amumed only the austerity, nothing of the and contemplative seclusion of the monas.

⁷it. Ambros. 8. ‡ Compare the account of Vaic.; Vita S. Ambros. lentinian's conduct in Theodorct, Epist. xxi. p. 865.; iv. 7.

Ambrose idvocate of selibacy.

tic system. The only Eastern influence which fettered his strong mind was his earnest admiration of celibacy; in all other respects he was a Roman statesman, not a meditative Oriental, or rhetorical The strong contrast of this doctrine Greek. with the dissolute manners of Rome, which no doubt extended to Milan, made it the more impressive: it was received with all the ardour of novelty, and the impetuosity of the Italian character; it captivated all ranks and all orders. Mothers shut up their daughters, lest they should be exposed to the chaste seduction of the bishop's eloquence; and, binding themselves by rash vows of virginity, forfeit the hope of becoming Roman Ambrose, immediately on his appointment, under Valentinian I., asserted that ecclesiastical power which he confirmed under the feeble reign of Gratian and Valentinian II.; he maintained it when he was confronted by a nobler antagonist, the great Theodosius. He assumed the office of director of the royal conscience, and he administered it with all the uncompromising moral dignity which had no indulgence for unchristian vices, for injustice, or cruelty, even in an emperor, and with all the stern and conscientious intolerance of one, with whom hatred of paganism and of heresy were articles of his creed. the New Testament met in the person of Ambrosethe implacable hostility to idolatry, the abhorrence of every deviation from the established formulary of belief; the wise and courageous benevolence, the ^{} Theodoret, iv. 7.

ous and unselfish devotion to the great interf humanity.

CHAP. X.

Christianity assumed a haughtier and more tone in the conduct and writings of Am-. it was by no means forgetful of its gentler s, in allaying human misery, and extending eneficent care to the utmost bounds of so-

With Ambrose it began its high office of ating the horrors of slavery, which now that aged in turn on every frontier, might seem eaten individually the whole free population of Rome, who had drawn new supplies ives from almost every frontier of her domi-, now suffered fearful reprisals; her free citiwere sent into captivity and sold in the markets e barbarians, whose ancestors had been bought partered by her insatiable slave trade. did offerings of piety, the ornaments, even the captives by ecrated vessels of the churches, were prodigally nded by the Bishop of Milan, in the redempof captives.* "The church possesses gold, not easure up, but to distribute it for the welfare appiness of men. We are ransoming the souls en from eternal perdition. It is not merely the of men, and the honour of women, which are ngered in captivity, but the faith of their chil-

The blood of redemption which has gleamed ose golden cups has sanctified them, not for the ce alone, but for the redemption of man." †

umerent quos redemerint heathen orator. Ambros. Epist. ii., in excusable pride, to the + Offic. c. 15. c. 28.

BOOK 111. These arguments may be considered as a generous repudiation of the ecclesiastical spirit for the nobler ends of beneficence; and, no doubt, in that mediation of the church between mankind and the miseries of slavery, which was one of her most constant and useful ministrations during the darker period of human society, the example and authority of Ambrose perpetually encouraged the generosity of the more liberal, and repressed the narrow view of those who considered the consecrated treasures of the church inviolable, even for these more sacred objects.*

The ecclesiastical zeal of Ambrose, like that of Chrysostom, scorned the limits of his own diocese. The see of Sirmium was vacant; Ambrose appeared in that city to prevent the election of an Arian, and to secure the appointment of an orthodox bishop. The strength of the opposite party lay in the zeal and influence of the Empress Justina-Ambrose defied both, and made himself a powerful and irreconcilable enemy.

A. D. 383.

A. D. 379.

But, for a time, Justina was constrained to suppress her resentment. In a few years, Ambrose appears in a new position for a Christian bishops as the mediator between rival competitors for the empire. The ambassador sent to Maximus (who had assumed the purple in Gaul, and, after the murder of Gratian, might be reasonably suspected of hostile designs on Italy), was no distinguished warrior, or influential civilian; the difficult nego-

^{*} Even Fleury argues that these could not be consecrated vessels.

ciation was forced upon the bishop of Milan. The character and weight of Ambrose appeared the best protection of the young Valentinian. Ambrose is A. D. S75. said to have refused to communicate with Maximus. the murderer of his sovereign. The interests of his earthly monarch or of the empire would not induce him to sacrifice for an instant those of his heavenly Master; he would have no fellowship with the man of blood.* Yet so completely, either by his ability as a negociator, or his dignity and sanctity as a prelate, did he overawe the usurper, as to avert the evils of war, and to arrest the hostile invasion of his diocese and of Italy. He succeeded in establishing peace.

But the gratitude of Justina for this essential Dispute service could not avert the collision of hostile Empress religious creeds. The Empress demanded one of Justina. the churches in Milan for the celebration of the Arian service. The first and more modest request named the Porcian Basilica without the gates, but these demands rose to the new and largest edifice within the walls. † The answer of Ambrose was firm and distinct; it asserted the inviolability of all property in the possession of the church—"A bishop cannot alienate that which is dedicated to God." After some fruitless negociation, the officers of the Emperor proceeded to take possession of the Porcian Basilica. Where these buildings had belonged to the state, the Emperor might still, perhaps, assert the right of property. Tumults воок 111. arose: an Arian priest was severely handled, and only rescued from the hands of the populace by the influence of Ambrose Many wealthy persons were thrown into prison by the government, and heavy fines exacted on account of these seditions. But the inflexible Ambrose persisted in his refusalto acknowledge the imperial authority over things dedicated to God. When he was commanded to allay the populace. "it is in my power," he answered, " to retrain from exciting their violence, but it is for God to appease it when excited. The soldiers surrounded the building; they threatened to vio late the sanctity of the church, in which Ambros was performing the usual solemnities. The bisho calmiv continued his functions, and his undisturbe counterance seemed as if his whole mind was al sorbed : 's devotion. The soldiers entered the church; the afrighted females began to fly; b the rate and a med men tell on their knees a ... re ambros the revenue to pray and) .mnos sercei he pulpit; his: ... Was at the Ross of Con. he enlarged on serve of the with nome minutes, who c Constoli from to businesse less le reconstated with this experience her with I .. The Emperor of the

^{*} The seventeenth Epistle of † Paul. Vit. Ambrose. Ambros. Ambrose relates the whole trans- Epist. xx. action, p. 852.

1111		5000
in Dei man jung seen in Dei man in de curious de different in de curious de c	itor	•

has the Emperor to do with the adulteress, the CHAP. church of the heretics?" Intelligence arrived that the populace were tearing down the hangings of the church, on which was the sacred image of the sovereign, and which had been suspended in the Porcian Basilica, as a sign that the church had been taken into the possession of the Emperor. Ambrose sent some of his priests to allay the tumult, but went not himself. He looked triumphantly around on his armed devotees: "The Gentiles have entered into the inheritance of the Lord, but the armed Gentiles have become Christians, and coheirs of God. My enemies are now my defenders."

A confidential secretary of the Emperor appeared, not to expel or degrade the refractory prelate, but to deprecate his tyranny. "Why do ye hesitate to strike down the tyrant," replied Ambrose, "my only defence is in my power of exposing my life for the honour of God." He proceeded with proud humility, "Under the ancient law, priests have bestowed, they have not condescended to assume empire; kings have desired the priesthood, rather than priests the royal power." He appealed to his influence over Maximus, which had averted the invasion of Italy. The imperial authority quailed The Embefore the resolute prelate; the soldiers were with to Amdrawn, the prisoners released, and the fines an-brose. nulled.* When the Emperor himself was urged to confront Ambrose in the church, the timid or ^{*} Certatim hoc nuntiare milites, irruentes in altaria, osculis significare pacis insigne. Ambrose per-antelucanum).

Empress was compelled to bow, Paganism could CHAP. carcely hope to obtain even a patient hearing.

We have already related the contest between expiring Polytheism and ascendant Christianity in the persons of Symmachus and of Ambrose. The more polished periods and the gentle dignity of Symnachus might delight the old aristocracy of Rome. But the full flow of the more vehement eloquence of Ambrose, falling into the current of popular pinion at Milan, swept all before it.* By this ime the Old Testament language and sentiment vith regard to idolatry were completely incorporated vith the Christian feeling; and when Ambrose enforced on a Christian Emperor the sacred duty of intolerance against opinions and practices, which carcely a century before had been the established eligion of the Empire, his zeal was supported almost by the unanimous applause of the Christian world.

Ambrose did not rely on his eloquence alone, or on the awfulness of his sacerdotal character, to control the public mind. The champion of the the fantastic analogies and recondite significations which he perceives in almost every word, with the vain ingenuity of Ambrose: every word or number reminds him of every other place in the Scripture in which the same word or number occurs; and stringing them together with this loose connection, he works out some latent mystic signification, which he would suppose to have been within the intention of the inspired writer. See particularly the Hexaemeron.

[•] The most curious fact relating to Ambrose, is the extraordinary contrast between his vigorous, practical, and statesmanlike character as a man, as well as that of such among his writings, as may be called public and popular, and the mystic subtlety which fills most of his theological works. He treats the Scripture as one vast allegory, and propounds his own fanciful interpretation, or corollaries, with as much authority as if they were the plain sense of the sacred writer. No retired schoolman follows out

III.

Church was invested by popular belief, perhaps by his own ardent faith, with miraculous power, and the high state of religious excitement was maintained in Milan by the increasing dignity and splendour of the ceremonial, and by the pompous installation of the relics of saints within the principal church.

It cannot escape the observation of a calm inquirer into the history of man, or be disguised by an admirer of a rational, pious, and instructive Christian ministry, that whenever, from this period, the clergy possessed a full and dominant power, the claim to supernatural power is more frequently and ostentatiously made, while where they possess a less complete ascendancy, miracles cease. While Ambrose was at least availing himself of, if not encouraging, this religious credulity, Chrysostom, partly, no doubt, from his own good sense, partly from respect for the colder and more inquisitiv € character of his audience, not merely distinct! disayows miraculous powers in his own person, but asserts that long ago they had come to an end. But in Milan the archbishop asserts his own belief in of Julian and of Maximin. But he gives the death of Julian as one of those miracles. Καὶ γὰρ καὶ διστοῦτο, καὶ δίτερον τὰ σημεῖα ἐπατοῦτο θεός, in Matt. vii. 375. Comparalso vol. i. p. 411. xi. 397. in Coloss on Psalm cxlii. vol. v. p. 455. Middleton has dwelt at length on this subject. Works, vol. i. p. 103.

Augustine denies the continuance of miracles with equal distinctness. Cum enim Ecclesia Catholica per totum orbem diffusa atque fundata sit, nec miracula illa and the eager enthusiasm of the people did not hesi- CHAP. tate to embrace as unquestionable truth, the public display of preternatural power in the streets of the city. A dream revealed to the pious prelate the spot, where rested the relics of the martyrs, St. Gervaise and Protadius. As they approached the spot, a man possessed by a demon was seized with a paroxysm, which betrayed his trembling consciousness of the presence of the holy remains. The bones of two men of great stature were found, with much blood.* The bodies were disinterred, and conveyed in solemn pomp to the Ambrosian Church. They were reinterred under the altar; they became the tutelary Saints of the spot.† A blind butcher, named Severus, recovered his eyesight by the application of a handkerchief, which had touched the relics, and this was but one of many wonders which were universally supposed to have been in nostra tempora durare permissa sunt, ne animus semper visibilia Junereret, et eorum consuetudine Relig. c. 47. Oper i. 765. Yet Pleury appeals, and not without ground, to the repeated testimony of St. Augustine, as eye-witness of this miracle; and the reader of 8t. Augustine's works, even his noblest (see lib. xx. c. 8.), the City of God, cannot but call to mind Perpetual instances of miraculous occurrences related with unhesitating faith. It is singular how often we hear at one time the strong intellect of Augustine, at another the we of Augustine, speaking in his works.

* The Arians denied this miracle,

Ambrose, Epist. xxii. Invenimus miræ magnitudinis viros duos, ut prisca ætas ferebat. Did Ambrose suppose that the race of men had degenerated in the last two or three centuries? or that the heroes of the faith had been gifted with heroic stature? The sermon of Ambrose is a strange rhapsody, which would only suit an highly excited audience. He acknow-ledges that these martyrs were unknown, and that the church of Milan was before barren of relics.

† " Succedunt victimæ triumphales in locum ubi Christus natus est; sed ille super altare qui pro omnibus passus est; isti sub altari qui illius reveriti sunt passionem;" but Ambrose calls them the guardians and defenders of the Church.

wrought by the smallest article of dress, which had imbibed the miraculous virtue of these sacred bones.

The awe-struck mind was never permitted to repose; more legitimate means were employed to maintain the ardent belief, thus enforced upon the multitude. The whole ceremonial of the church was conducted by Ambrose with unrivalled solemnity and magnificence. Music was cultivated with the utmost care; some of the noblest hymns of the Latin Church are attributed to Ambrose himself, and the Ambrosian service for a long period distinguished the Church of Milan by the grave dignity and simple fullness of its harmony.

But the sacerdotal dignity of Ambrose might command a feeble boy: he had now to confront the imperial majesty in the person of one of the greatest men who had ever worn the Roman purple. Even in the midst of his irreconcilable feud with the heretical Empress, Ambrose had been again entreated to spread the shield of his protection over the youthful Emperor. He had undertaken a second embassy to the usurper Maximus. Maximus, as if he feared the awful influence of Ambrose over his mind, refused to admit the priestly ambassador, except to a public audience. Ambrose was considered as condescending from his dignity, in approaching the throne of the Emperor. The usurper reproached him for his former interference, by which he had been arrested in his invasion of Italy, and had lost the opportunity of becoming master of the unresisting province. Ambrose answered with rdonable pride, that he accepted the honourable cusation of having saved the orphan Emperor. e then arrayed himself, as it were, in his priestly violability, reproached Maximus with the murr of Gratian, and demanded his remains. ain refused all spiritual communion with one ilty of innocent blood, for which as yet he had bmitted to no ecclesiastical penance. Maximus. might have been expected, drove from his court e daring prelate, who had thus stretched to the most the sanctity of person attributed to an ambasdor and a bishop. Ambrose, however, returned t merely safe, but without insult or outrage, to s Italian diocese.*

Second embassy to Maximus.

* This subject will recur at a later part of this volume.

The arms of Theodosius decided the contest, Accession d secured the trembling throne of Valentinian of Theodoe younger. But the accession of Theodosius, A. D. 388. stead of obscuring the rival pretensions of the nurch to power and influence, seemed to confirm d strengthen them. That such a mind as that of neodosius should submit with humility to ecclestical remonstrance and discipline tended no ubt, beyond all other events, to overawe man-1d. Everywhere else throughout the Roman orld, the state, and even the Church, bowed at e feet of Theodosius; in Milan alone, in the ight of his power, he was confronted and subed by the more commanding mind and religious ijesty of Ambrose. His justice as well as his gnity quailed beneath the ascendancy of the pree. A synagogue of the Jews at Callinicum, in

* Epist. xxiv.

BOOK III. Jewish synagogue destroyed, Osroene, had been burned by the Christians, it was said, at the instigation, if not under the actual sanction, of the Bishop. The church of the Valentinian Gnostics had likewise been destroyed and plundered by the zeal of some monks. Theodosius commanded the restoration of the synagogue at the expense of the Christians, and a fair compensation to the heretical Valentinians for their losses.

The pious indignation of Ambrose was not restrained either by the remoteness of these transactions from the scene of his own labours, or

In a letter to the Emperor, he boldly vindicated the Bishop; he declared himself, as far as himself, as far by the undeniable violence of the Christian party—He stood forward, designated, it might seem, by his situation and character, as the acknowledged champion of the whole of Christianity; the sacredotal power was embodied in his person—

Conduct of Ambrose.

* Hac proposità conditione, puto dicturum episcopum, quòd ipse ignes sparserit, turbas compulerit, populos concluserit, ne amittat occasionem martyrii, ut pro invalidis subjiciat validiorem. O beatum mendacium quo adquiritur sibi aliorum absolutio, sui gratia. Hoc est, Imperator, quod poposci et ego, ut in me magis vindicares, et hoc si crimen putares mihi adscriberes. Quid mandas in absente judicium? Habes præsentem, habes confitentem reum. Proclamo quod ego synagogam incenderim certè quod ego illis mandaverim ne esset locus, in quo Christus negaretur. Si objiciatur mihi, cur hic non incenderim? Divino jam cæpi cremari judicio; meum cessavit opus. Epist. xxiv. p. 561.

mandate, he would be an apostate, and the Emperor would be answerable for his apostasy. This act was but a slight and insufficient retaliation for the deeds of plunder and destruction perpetrated by the Jews and heretics against orthodox Christians. The letter of Ambrose did not produce the desired effect; but the bishop renewed his address in public in the church, and at length extorted from the Emperor the impunity of the offenders. Then, and not till then, he condescended to approach the altar, and to proceed with the service of God.

Ambrose felt his strength; he feared not to assert that superiority of the altar over the throne which was a fundamental maxim of his Christianity. There is no reason to ascribe to ostentation, or to sacerdotal ambition, rather than to the profound conviction of his mind, the dignity which he vindicated for the priesthood, the authority supreme and without appeal in all things which related to the ceremonial of religion. Theodosius endured, and the people applauded, his public exclusion of the Emperor from within the impassable rails, Which fenced off the officiating priesthood from the profane laity. An exemption had usually been made for the sacred person of the Emperor, and, according to this usage, Theodosius ventured Within the forbidden precincts. Ambrose, with lofty courtesy, pointed to the seat or throne reserved for the Emperor, at the head of the laity. Theodosius submitted to the rebuke, and withdrew to the lowlier station.

VOL. III.

CHAP.

But if these acts of Ambrose might to some? appear unwise or unwarrantable aggressions on the dignity of the civil magistrate; or if to the phetic sagacity of others they might foreshow the growth of an enormous and irresponsible authority, and awaken well-grounded apprehension or jealousy, the Roman world could not withhold its admiration from another act of the Milanese prelate: it could not but hail the appearance of a new moral power, enlisted on the side of humanity and justice; a power which could bow the loftiest, as well as the meanest, under its dominion. the first time since the establishment of the imperial despotism, the voice of a subject was heard in deliberate, public, and authoritative condemnstion of a deed of atrocious tyranny, and sanguinary vengeance; for the first time, an Emperor of Rome trembled before public opinion, and humbled himself to a contrite confession of guilt and cruelty.

Massacre of Thessalonica.

With all his wisdom and virtue, Theodosius was liable to paroxysms of furious and ungovernable anger. A dispute had arisen in Thessalonica about a favourite charioteer in the circus; out of the dispute, a sedition, in which some lives were lost. The imperial officers, who interfered to suppress the fray, were wounded or slain, and Botheric, the representative of the Emperor, treated with indignity. Notwithstanding every attempt on the part of the clergy to allay the furious resentment of Theodosius, the counsels of the more violent advisers prevailed. Secret orders were issued; the circus, filled with the whole population of the city, was surrounded by troops, and a general and in- CHAP. discriminate massacre of all ages and sexes, the guilty and the innocent, revenged the insult on the imperial dignity. Seven thousand lives were acrificed in this remorseless carnage.

On the first intelligence of this atrocity, Ambrose, with prudent self-command, kept aloof from the exasperated Emperor. He retired into the country. and a letter from his own hand was delivered to the sovereign. The letter expressed the horror of Ambrose and his brother bishops at this inhuman deed, in which he should consider himself an accomplice if he could refrain from expressing his detestation of its guilt; if he should not refuse to communicate with a man stained with the innocent blood, not of one, but of thousands. He exhorts him to penitence; he promises his prayers in his He acted up to his declaration; the Emperor of the world found the doors of the church closed against him. For eight months he endured this ignominious exclusion. Even on the sacred day of the Nativity, he implored in vain to be admitted within those precincts which were open to the slave and to the beggar; those precincts which were the vestibule to heaven, for through the church alone was heaven to be approached. Submission and remonstrance were alike in vain: to an urgent minister of the sovereign, Ambrose calmly replied, that the Emperor might kill him, and pass over his body into the sanctuary.

At length Ambrose consented to admit the Emperor to an audience; with difficulty he was persuaded to permit him to enter, not into the church itself, but into the outer porch, the place of the public penitents. At length the interdict was removed on two conditions; that the Emperor should issue an edict prohibiting the execution of capital punishments for thirty days after conviction, and that he should submit to public penance. Stripped of his imperial ornaments, prostrate on the pavement, beating his breast, tearing his hair, watering the ground with his tears, the master of the Roman empire, the conqueror in so many victories, the legislator of the world, at length received the hard wrung absolution.

This was the culminating point of pure Christian influence. Christianity appeared before the world as the champion and vindicator of outraged humanity; as having founded a tribunal of justice, which extended its protective authority over the meanest, and suspended its retributive penalties over the mightiest of mankind.

First capital punishment for religion.

ligion. A. d. 58*5.* Nearly at the same time (about four years before) had been revealed the latent danger from this new unlimited sovereignty over the human mind. The first blood was judicially shed for religious opinion. Far however from apprehending the fatal consequences which might arise out of their own exclusive and intolerant sentiments, or foreseeing that the sacerdotal authority, which they fondly and sincerely supposed they were strengthening for the unalloyed welfare of mankind, would seize and wield the sword of persecution with such remorseless and unscrupulous severity, this first fatal libation of Christian blood, which was the act of an usurping Emperor, and a few foreign bishops, was CHAP. solemnly disclaimed by all the more influential dignitaries of the Western Church. Priscillian, a Priscillian noble and eloquent Spaniard, had embraced some lowers. Manichean or rather Gnostic opinions. The same contradictory accusations of the severest asceticism and of licentious habits, which were so perpetually adduced against the Manicheans, formed the chief charge against Priscillian and his followers. The leaders of the sect had taken refuge, from the persecutions of their countrymen, in Gaul, and propagated their opinions to some extent in Aquitaine. They were pursued with unwearied animosity by the Spanish Bishops Ithacius and Idacius. Maximus, the usurping Emperor of Gaul, who then resided at Treves, took cognisance of the case. In vain the celebrated Martin of Tours, whose life Martin of was almost an unwearied campaign against idolatry, and whose unrelenting hand had demolished every religious edifice within his reach; a prelate whose dread of heresy was almost as sensitive as of Paganism, urged his protest against these proceedings with all the vehemence of his character. During his absence, a capital sentence was extorted from the Emperor: Priscillian and some of his followers were put to death by the civil authority for the crime of religious error. The fatal precedent was disowned by the general voice of Christianity. required another considerable period of ignorance and bigotry to deaden the fine moral sense of Christianity to the total abandonment of its spirit of love. When Ambrose reproached the usurper Conduct of

Ambrose.

with the murder of his sovereign, Gratian, he re minded him likewise of the unjust execution of the Priscillianists; he refused to communicate with the bishops who had any concern in that sanguinar and unchristian transaction.*

A. B. 392. Death of Valentinian, A. B. 393. Ambrose witnessed and lamented the death of the young Valentinian, over whom he pronounce a funeral oration. On the usurpation of the Paga Eugenius, he fled from Milan, but returned to behold and to applaud the triumph of Theodosia. The conquering Emperor gave a new proof of homage to Christianity and to its representative. Under the influence of Ambrose, he refrained for a time from communicating in the Christian my teries, because his hands were stained with bloom though that blood had been shed in a just an necessary war.† To Ambrose the dying Empero commended his sons, and the Bishop of Mila pronounced the funeral oration over the last gree Emperor of the world.

Death of Theodo-sius.

A. D. 395.

Death of Ambrose.

A. D. 397.

He did not long survive his imperial friend. It is related that, when Ambrose was on his death bed, Stilicho, apprehending the loss of such a material to Italy and to Christendom, urged the principal inhabitants of Milan to entreat the effective prayer of the bishop for his own recovery. "I have not so lived among you," replied Ambrose, "as to have ashamed to live; I have so good a Master, that am not afraid to die." Ambrose expired in that attitude and in the act of prayer.

^{*} Ambros. Epist. xxiv. The + Oratio de Obitu Theodos. 34 whole transaction in Sulpicius Sever. E. H. and Life of St. Martin.

While Ambrose was thus assuming an unprecedented supremacy over his own age, and _ deepening and strengthening the foundation of the ecclesiastical power, Augustine was beginning gradually to consummate that total change in human opinion which was to influence the Christianity of the remotest ages.

Of all Christian writers since the Apostles, Au- Augustine, gustine has maintained the most permanent and extensive influence. That influence, indeed, was unfelt, or scarcely felt, in the East; but as the East gradually became more estranged, till it was little more than a blank in Christian history, the dominion of Augustine over the opinions of the Western world was eventually over the whole of Christendom. Basil and Chrysostom spoke a language foreign or dead to the greater part of the Christian world. The Greek empire, after the reign of Justinian, gradually contracting its limits and sinking into abject superstition, forgot its own great writers on the more momentous subjects of religion and morality, for new controversialists on frivolous and insignificant points of difference. The more important feuds, as of Nestorianism, made little progress in the West; the West repudiated almost with one voice the iconoclastic opinions; and at length Mohammedanism swept away its fairest provinces, and limited the Greek church to a still narrowing circle. The Latin language thus became almost that of Christianity; Latin writers the sole authority to which men appealed, or from which they imperceptibly imbibed the tone of religious doctrine or sentiment. Of these, Augustine was the most universal, the most commanding, the most influential.

. 1

The earliest Christian writers had not been able or willing altogether to decline some of the more obvious and prominent points of the Augustinian theology; but in his works they were first wrought up into a regular system. Abstruse topics, which had been but slightly touched, or dimly hinted in the Apostolic writings, and of which the older creeds had been entirely silent, became the prominent and unavoidable tenets of Christian doctrine. Augustinianism has constantly revived, in all its strongest and most peremptory statements, in every period of religious excitement. In later days, it formed much of the doctrinal system of Luther; it was worked up into a still more rigid and uncompromising system by the severe intellect of Calvin; it was remoulded into the Roman Catholic doctrine by Jansenius; the popular theology of most of the Protestant sects is but a modified Augustinianism.

Augustinian theology. Christianity had now accomplished its divine mission, so far as impregnating the Roman world with its first principles, the unity of God, the immortality of the soul, and future retribution. These vital questions between the old Paganism and the new religion had been decided by their almost general adoption into the common sentiments of mankind. And now questions naturally and necessarily arising out of the providential government of that Supreme Deity, out of that conscious immortality, and out of that acknowledged retribution.

had begun profoundly to agitate the human heart. The nature of man had been stirred in its inmost. depths. The hopes and fears, now centered on another state of being, were ever restlessly hovering over the abyss into which they were forced to gaze. As men were not merely convinced, but deeply penetrated, with the belief that they had souls to be saved, the means, the process, the degree of attainable assurance concerning salvation, became subjects of anxious inquiry. Every kind of information on these momentous topics was demanded with importunity, and hailed with eagerness. With the ancient philosophy, the moral condition of man was a much simpler and calmer subject of consideration. It could coldly analyse every emotion, trace the workings of every passion, and present its results; if in eloquent language, kindling the mind of the hearer, rather by that language, than by the excitement of the inquiry. It was the attractive form of the philosophy, the adventitious emotion produced by bold paradox, happy invention, acute dialectics, which amused and partially enlightened the inquisitive mind. But now mingled up with religion, every sensation, every feeling, every propensity, every thought, had become not merely a symptom of the moral condition, but an element in that state of spiritual advancement or deterioration which was to be . weighed and examined in the day of judgment. The ultimate and avowed object of philosophy, the summum bonum, the greatest attainable happiness, shrunk into an unimportant consideration. These were questions of spiritual life and death, and the solution was therefore embraced rather by the will and the passions, than by the cool and sober The solution of these difficulties was the more acceptable in proportion as it was peremptory and dogmatic; any thing could be endured rather than uncertainty, and Augustine himself was, doubtless, urged more by the desire of peace to his own anxious spirit than by the ambition of dictating to Christianity on these abstruse The influence of Augustine thus concentered the Christian mind on subjects to which Christianity led, but did not answer with fulness or precision. The Gospels and Apostolic writings paused within the border of attainable human knowledge; Augustine fearlessly rushed forward, or was driven by his antagonists; and partly from the reasonings of a new religious philosophy, partly by general inferences from limited and particular phrases in the sacred writings, framed a complete, it must be acknowledged, and as far as its own consistency, an harmonious system; but of which it was the inevitable tendency to give an overpower. ing importance to problems on which Christianit wisely measuring, it should seem, the capacity the human mind, had declined to utter any fin or authoritative decrees. Almost up to this perio in Christian history*, on these mysterious topics, a was unquestioned and undefined; and though the could not but cross the path of Christian reasoning

CHAP X. BOOK 111.

Vossius may be found quotations expressive of the sentiments of the

^{*} In the Historia Pelagiana of earlier Fathers on many of thes points.

-could not but be incidentally noticed, they had, as yet, undergone no full or direct investigation. Nothing but the calmest and firmest philosophy could have avoided or eluded these points, on which, though the human mind could not attain to knowledge, it was impatient of ignorance. The immediate or more remote, the direct or indirect, the sensible or the imperceptible, influence of the divine agency (grace) on the human soul, with the inseparable consequences of necessity and free-will, thus became the absorbing and agitating points of From many causes, these in-Christian doctrine. evitable questions had forced themselves, at this period, on the general attention; Manicheism on one hand, Pelagianism on the other, stirred up their darkest depths. The Christian mind demanded on all these topics at once excitement and rest. Nothing could be more acceptable than the unhesitating and peremptory decisions of Augustine; and his profound piety ministered perpetual emotion; his glowing and perspicuous language, his confident dogmatism, and the apparent completeness of his system, offered repose.

But the primary principle of the Augustinian theology was already deeply rooted in the awestruck piety of the Christian world. In this state of the general mind, that which brought the Deity more directly and more perpetually in contact with the soul, at once enlisted all minds which were under the shadow of religious fears, or softened by any milder religious feeling. It was not a remote supremacy, a government through unseen and untraceable influences, a general reverential trust in the divine protection, which gave satisfaction to the agitated spirit; but an actually felt and immediate presence, operating on each particular and most minute part of the creation; not a regular and unvarying emanation of the divine will, but a special and peculiar intervention in each separate case. The whole course of human events, and the moral condition of each individual, were alike under the acknowledged, or conscious and direct, operation of the Deity. But the more distinct and unquestioned this principle, the more the problem which in a different form had agitated the Eastern world, — the origin of evil, — forced itself There it had taken a kind on the consideration. of speculative or theogonical turn, and allied itself with physical notions; here it became a moral and practical, and almost every-day question, involving the prescience of God and the freedom of the human Augustine had rejected Manicheism; th€ antagonist and equally conflicting powers of that system had offended his high conception of the supremacy of God. Still his earlier Manicheism lent an unconscious colouring to his maturer opinions. In another form, he divided the world into regions of cloudless light and total darkness. But he did not mingle the Deity in any way in the darkness which enveloped the whole of mankind, a chosen portion of which alone were rescued, by the gracious intervention of the Redeemer and the Holy Spirit. The rest were separated by an insuperable barrier, that of hereditary evil; they bore within, the fatal and inevitable proscription. Within the pale of CHAP. Election was the world of Light, without, the world ... X. of Perdition; and the human soul was so reduced to a subordinate agent before the mysterious and inscrutable power, which, by the infusion of faith, rescued it from its inveterate hereditary propensity, as to become entirely passive, altogether annihilated, in overleaping the profound though narrow gulph, which divided the two kingdoms of Grace and of Perdition.

CIIAP. X.

Thus that system which assigned the most unbounded and universal influence to the Deity was seized upon by devout piety as the truth which it would be an impious limitation of Omnipotence to Man offered his free agency on the question. altar of his religion, and forgot that he thereby degraded the most wonderful work of Omnipotence, a being endowed with free agency. While the internal consciousness was not received as sufficient evidence of the freedom of the will, it was considered as unquestionable testimony to the operations of divine grace.

At all events, these questions now became unavoidable articles of the Christian faith; from this time the simpler Apostolic Creed, and the splendid amplifications of the divine attributes of the Trinity, were enlarged, if not by stern definitions, by dictatorial axioms on original sin, on grace, predestination, the total depravity of mankind, election to everlasting life, and final reprobation. To the appellations which awoke what was considered righteous and legitimate hatred in all true believers, Arianism and Manicheism, was now added as a term of equal obloquy, — Pelagianism.

 The doctrines of Pelagius have been represented as arising out of the monastic spirit, or at least out of one form of its influence. The high ideal of moral perfection which the monk set before himself, the conscious strength of will which was necessary to aspire to that height, the proud impatience and disdain of the ordinary excuse for infirmity, the inherited weakness and depravity of human nature, induced the colder and more severe Pelagius to embrace his peculiar tenets; the rejection of original sin; the assertion of the entire freedom of the will; the denial or limitation of the influence of divine grace. Of the personal history of Pelagius little is known, except that he was a British or French monk (his name is said, in one tradition, to have been Morgan), but neither he nor his colleague Cælestius appears to have been a secluded ascetic; they dwelt in Rome for some time, where they propagated their doc-trines. Of his character perhaps still less is known, unless from his tenets, and some fragments of his writings, preserved by his adversaries; excepting that the blamelessness of his manners is admitted by his adversaries (the term egregiè Christianus is the expression of St. Augustine): and even the violent Jerome bears testimony to his innocence of life.

But the tenets of Augustine appear to flow more directly from the monastic system. His doctrines (in his controversy with Pelagius, for in his other writings holds another tone) are tinged with the Encratite or Manichean notion, that there was a physical transmission of sin in the propagation of children, even in lawful meriage. (See, among other witer, Jer. Taylor's Vindication of his Dess Justificatus.) Even this concupiscentia carnis peccatum est, qui inest illi inobedientia contra doninatum mentis. De Pecc. Remis, i. This is the old doctrine of the inherent evil of matter. We are astonished that Augustine, who had been a father, and a fond father, though of an illegitimate son, con be driven by the stern logic of polemics to the damnation of unit tized infants, a milder damnstin it is true, to eternal fire. was the more genuine doctrine of men in whose hearts all the sweet charities of life had been long seared up by monastic discipline; sea like Fulgentius, to whose name the title of saint is prefixed, and who lays down this benignant Christian axiom: "Firmissime to et nullatenus dubites, parvelo sive in uteris matrum vivere inci unt, et ibi moriuntur, sive cum de matribus nati, sine sacramento sancto baptismatis de hoc secusio transeunt, ignis æterni sempile supplicio puniendos." Fulgent de Fide, quoted in Vossius, Ha Pelag. p. 257.

Jie

OK.

X 77

Li ID

15 5

COL

tO

The assertion of the entire fredom of the will, and the restrict sense in which Pelagius appears have received the doctrine of divingrace, confining it to the influence of the divine revelation, appear arise out of philosophical reasonings, rather than out of the mastic spirit. The severe monast discipline was more likely to infus the sense of the slavery of the will and the brooding over bodily an mental emotions, the general cause and result of the monastic spirit.

Augustine, by the extraordinary adaptation of CHAP. is genius to his own age, the comprehensive randeur of his views, the intense earnestness of his haracter, his inexhaustible activity, the vigour, warmth, and perspicuity of his style, had a right o command the homage of Western Christendom. He was at once the first universal, and the purest nd most powerful of the Latin Christian writers. It is singular that almost all the earlier Christian uthors in the West were provincials, chiefly of Africa. But the works of Tertullian were, in general, brief treatises on temporary subjects of controversy; if enlivened by the natural vehemence and strength of the man, disfigured by the worst arbarisms of style. The writings of Cyprian were hiefly short epistles or treatises on subjects of mmediate or local interest. Augustine retained he fervour and energy of the African style with such purer and more perspicuous Latinity. His rdent imagination was tempered by reasoning owers which boldly grappled with every subject. le possessed and was unembarrassed by the posession of all the knowledge which had been acumulated in the Roman world. He commanded ne whole range of Latin literature, and perhaps is influence over his own hemisphere was not have disposed him to his system; as the more vehement character, and agitated religious life of Augustine, to his vindication, founded he calmer temperament, indeed, on his internal experience of the d probably more peaceful religionstant divine agency upon the ould tend to exaggerate rather an to question or limit the acal, and even sensible workings the divine spirit within the soul. us developement of Pelagius, may heart and the soul.

diminished by his ignorance, or at best imperfect and late-acquired acquaintance with Greek. But all his knowledge and all his acquirements fell into the train of his absorbing religious sentiments or passions. On the subjects with which he was conversant, a calm and dispassionate philosophy would have been indignantly repudiated by the Christian mind, and Augustine's temperament was too much in harmony with that of the time to offend by deficiency in fervour. It was profound religious agitation, not cold and abstract truth, which the age required; the emotions of piety, rather than the convictions of severe logical inquiry; and in Augustine, the depth or abstruseness of the matter never extinguished or allayed the passion, or in one sense, the popularity, of his style. different periods of his life, Augustine aspired to and succeeded in enthralling all the various powers and faculties of the human mind. That life was the type of his theology; and as it passed through its various changes of age, of circumstance, and of opinion, it left its own impressions strongly and permanently stamped upon the whole Latin Chris-The gentleness of his childhood, the passions of his youth, the studies of his adolescence, the wilder dreams of his immature Christianity, the Manicheism, the intermediate stage of Platonism, through which he passed into orthodoxy, the fervour with which he embraced, the vigour with which he developed, the unhesitating confidence with which he enforced his final creed —all af- CHAP. fected more or less the general mind. His Confessions became the manual of all those who were forced by their temperament or inclined by their disposition to brood over the inward sensations of their own minds; to trace within themselves all the trepidations, the misgivings, the agonies, the exultations, of the religious conscience; the gradual formation of opinions till they harden into dogmas, or warm into objects of ardent passion. Augustine, this internal autobiography of the soul has always had the deepest interest for those of strong religious convictions; it was what multitudes had felt, but no one had yet embodied in words; it was the appalling yet attractive manner in which men beheld all the conflicts and adventures of their own spiritual life reflected with bold and speaking truth. Men shrunk from the divine and unapproachable image of Christian perfection in the life of the Redeemer, to the more earthly, more familiar picture of the development of the Christian character, crossed with the light and hade of human weakness and human passion.

^{*} On St. Augustine's knowledge of Greek, compare Tillemont, in his Life, p. 7. Punic was still spoken by the common people in the neighbourhood of Carthage.

The religious was more eventful than the civil ife of St. Augustine. He was born A.D. 354, in l'agasta, an episcopal city of Numidia. ents were Christians of respectable rank. hildhood, he was attacked by a dangerous illness; e entreated to be baptized; his mother Monica ook the alarm; all was prepared for that solemn eremony; but on his recovery, it was deferred, and Augustine remained for some years in the BOOK humbler rank of catechumen. He received the best education, in grammar and rhetoric, which the neighbouring city of Madaura could afford. seventeen, he was sent to Carthage to finish his Augustine has, perhaps, highly coloured both the idleness of his period of study in Madaura, and the licentious habits to which he abandoned himself in the dissolute city of Carthage. ardent mind plunged into the intoxicating enjoyments of the theatre, and his excited passions demanded every kind of gratification. He had a natural son, called by the somewhat inappropriate name A-deo-datus. He was first arrested in his sensual course, not by the solemn voice of religion, but by the gentler remonstrances of Pagan litera-He learned from Cicero, not from the Gospel, the higher dignity of intellectual attainments. From his brilliant success in his studies, it is clear that his life, if yielding at times to the temptations of youth, was not a course of indolence or total abandonment to pleasure. It was the Hortensius of Cicero which awoke his mind to nobler aspirations, and the contempt of worldly enjoyments.

> But philosophy could not satisfy the lofty desires which it had awakened: he panted for some better hopes, and more satisfactory objects of study. turned to the religion of his parents, but his mind was not subdued to a feeling for the inimitable beauty of the New Testament. Its simplicity of style appeared rude, after the stately march of ully's eloquence. But Manicheism seized at once upon his kindled imagination. For nine years, from the age of nineteen to twenty-eight, the mind CHAP. of Augustine wandered among the vague and fantastic reveries of Oriental theology. The virtuous and holy Monica, with the anxious apprehensions and prescient hopes of a mother's heart, watched over the irregular development of his powerful Her distress at his Manichean errors was mind. consoled by an aged bishop, who had himself been involved in the same opinions. "Be of good cheer, the child of so many tears cannot perish." The step against which she remonstrated most strongly, led to that result which she scarcely dared to hope. Augustine grew discontented with the wild Manichean doctrines, which neither satisfied the religious yearnings of his heart, nor the philosophical demands of his understanding. He was in danger of falling into a desperate Pyrrhonism, or at best the proud indifference of an Academic. He determined to seek a more distinguished sphere for his talents as a teacher of rhetoric; and, notwithstanding his mother's tears, he left Carthage for Rome. The fame A. D. 383.

Etat. 29. of his talents obtained him an invitation to teach He was there within the magic circle of the great ecclesiastic of the West. But we cannot A. D. 385. pause to trace the throes and pangs of his final conversion. The writings of St. Paul accomplished what the eloquence of Ambrose had begun. In one of the paroxysms of his religious agony, he seemed to hear a voice from heaven,—"Take and read, take and read." Till now he had rejected the writings of the Apostle; he opened on the passage which contains the awful denunciations of Paul against the dissolute morals of the Heathen. The conscience of Augustine recognised "in the chambering and wantonness" the fearful picture of his own life; for though he had abandoned the looser indulgences of his youth (he had lived in strict fidelity, not to a lawful wife indeed, but to a concubine) even his mother was anxious to disengage him, by an honourable marriage, from the bonds of a less legitimate connection. But he burst at once his thraldom; shook his old nature from his heart: renounced for ever all, even lawful indulgences, of the carnal desires; forswore the world, and withdrew himself, though without exciting any unnecessary astonishment among his hearers, from his profaner function as teacher of rhetoric. His mother, who had followed him to Milan, lived to witness his baptism as a Catholic Christian, by the hands of Ambrose; and in all the serene happiness of her accomplished hopes and prayers, expired in his arms before his return to Africa. His son, Adeodatus, who died a few years afterwards, was baptized at the same time. To return to the writings of St. Augustine, or > troversial treatises against the Manicheans and against Pelagius, Augustine had the power of seemingly at least, bringing down those abstruse subjects to popular comprehension. His vehement and intrepid dogmatism hurried along the unresisting mind, which was allowed no pause > > for the sober examination of difficulties, or was awed into acquiescence by the still suspended charge of impiety. The imagination was at the same time rather to his life in his writings.

Baptism of Augustine. a. d. 387.

In his con-

Controversialwritings rake by a rich vein of allegoric interpretactated by the same bold decision, and enas necessary conclusions from the sacred , or latent truths intentionally wrapped up mysterious phrases.

City of God was unquestionably the noblest City of oth in its original design and in the fulness aborate execution, which the genius of man yet contributed to the support of Chris-

Hitherto the Apologies had been framed : particular exigences: they were either nd pregnant statements of the Christian is; refutations of prevalent calumnies; inagainst the follies and crimes of Paganism; itations of anti-Christian works, like those is, Porphyry, or Julian, closely following ourse of argument, and rarely expanding ieral and comprehensive views of the great

The City of God, in the first place, inas designed to decide for ever the one iestion, which alone kept in suspense the between Paganism and Christianity, the ion between the fall of the empire and the under which the whole Roman society aning, with the desertion of the ancient Even this part of his theme led of Rome. ine into a full, and, if not impartial, yet far mprehensive survey of the whole religion losophy of antiquity, than had been yet d in any Christian work. It has preserved some branches of these subjects than the The City of urviving Latin literature.

God was not merely a defence, it was likewise an exposition of Christian doctrine. The last twelve books developed the whole system with a regularity and copiousness, as far as we know, never before attempted by any Christian writer. It was the first complete Christian theology.

A. D. 410.

Occasion of its composition.

The immediate occasion of this important work of Augustine was worthy of this powerful concentration of his talents and knowledge. The capture of Rome by the Goths had appalled the whole empire. So long as the barbarians only broke through the frontiers, or severed province after province from the dominion of the Emperor, men could close their eyes to the gradual declension and decay of the Roman supremacy; and in the rapid alternations of power, the empire, under some new Cæsar or Constantine, might again throw back the barbaric inroads; or where the barbarians were settled within the frontiers, awe them into peaceful subjects, or array them as valiant defenders of their dominions. As long as both Romes, more especially the ancient city of the West, remained inviolate, so long the fabric of the Roman greatness seemed unbroken, and she might still assert her title as Mistress of the World. The capture of Rome dissipated for ever these proud illusions; it struck the Roman world to the heart; and in the mortal agony of the old social system, men wildly grasped at every cause which could account for this unexpected, this inexplicable, phenomenon. They were as much overwhelmed with dread and wonder as if there had been no previous omens of ay, no slow and progressive approach to the C1 red walls; as if the fate of the city had not been ___ eady twice suspended by the venality, the mercy, the prudence of the conqueror. re again heard impeaching the new religion as e cause of this disastrous consummation: the serted gods had deserted in their turn the apose city.*

There seems no doubt that Pagan ceremonies ok place in the hour of peril, to avert, if possible, e imminent ruin. The respect paid by the barrians to the churches might, in the zealous or en the wavering votaries of Paganism, strengthen e feeling of some remote connection between the stroyer of the civil power and the destroyer of e ancient religions. The Roman aristocracy, ich fled to different parts of the world, more ticularly to the yet peaceful and uninvaded vince of Africa; and among whom the feelings uttachment to the institutions and to the gods lome were still the strongest, were not likely to ress the language of indignation and sorrow, or frain from the extenuation of their own cowardnd effeminacy, by ascribing the fate of the city e irresistible power of the alienated deities. igustine dedicated thirteen years to the comn of this work, which was for ever to de-

A. D. 415 to 426.

sius attempted the same the Pagans, he asserts, ia tantum tempora, veluti a solitum infestissima, ob ı, quod creditur Christus. idola autem minus co-amant." Heyne has well observed on this work of Orosius.-Excitaverat Augustini vibrantis arma exemplum Orosium, discipulum, ut et ipse arma sumeret, etsi imbellibus manibus. Opuscula, vi. p. 130.

termine this solemn question, and to silence the The City of last murmurs of expiring Paganism. God is at once the funeral oration of the ancient. society, the gratulatory panegyric on the birth of the new. It acknowledged, it triumphed in the irrevocable fall of the Babylon of the West, the shrine of idolatry; it hailed at the same time the universal dominion which awaited the new theocratic polity. The earthly city had undergone its predestined fate; it had passed away with all its vices and superstitions, with all its virtues and its glories (for the soul of Augustine was not dead to the noble reminiscences of Roman greatness), with its false gods and its Heathen sacrifices: its doom was sealed, and for ever. But in its place had arisen the City of God, the Church of Christ; a new social system had emerged from the ashes of the old; that system was founded by God, was ruled by divine laws, and had the divine promise of perpetuity.

The first ten books are devoted to the question of the connection between the prosperity and the religion of Rome; five to the influence of Paganism in this world; five in that in the world to come. Augustine appeals in the five first to the mercy shown by the conqueror, as the triumph of Christianity. Had the Pagan Radagaisus taken Rome, not a life would have been spared, no place would have been sacred. The Christian Alaric had been checked and overawed by the sanctity of the Christian character, and his respect for his Christian brethren. He denies that dly prosperity is an unerring sign of the divine ur; he denies the exemption of the older nans from disgrace and distress, and recapituthe crimes and the calamities of their history ng their worship of their ancient gods. ibes their former glory to their valour, their ality, their contempt of wealth, their fortitude, their domestic virtues; he assigns their vices, r frightful profligacy of manners, their pride, r luxury, their effeminacy, as the proximate es of their ruin. Even in their ruin they could forget their dissolute amusements; the theatres arthage were crowded with the fugitives from In the five following books he examines pretensions of Heathenism to secure felicity in world to come; he dismisses with contempt old popular religion, but seems to consider the osophic Theism, the mystic Platonism of the period, a worthier antagonist. He puts forth all ubtlety and power in refutation of these tenets. he last twelve books place in contrast the in, the pretensions, the fate, of the new city, that lod: he enters at large into the evidences of istianity; he describes the sanctifying effects of aith; but pours forth all the riches of his imagion and eloquence on the destinies of the church e Resurrection. Augustine had no vision of the dly power of the new city; he foresaw not the tual empire of Rome which would replace the new n Rome of Heathenism. With him the triumph hristianity is not complete till the world itself, merely its outward framework of society and the constitution of its kingdoms, has experienced a total change. In the description of the final kingdom of Christ, he treads his way with great dexterity and address between the grosser notions of the Millenarians, with their kingdom of earthly wealth, and power, and luxury (this he repudiates with devout abhorrence); and that finer and subtler spiritualism, which is ever approaching to Pantheism, and by the rejection of the bodily resurrection, renders the existence of the disembodied spirit too fine and impalpable for the general apprehension.

CHAP. X.

Life of Augustine.

The uneventful personal life of St. Augustine, at least, till towards its close, contrasts with that of Ambrose and Chrysostom. After the first throes and travail of his religious life, described with such dramatic fidelity in his Confessions, he subsided into a peaceful bishop in a remote and rather inconsiderable town.* He had not, like Ambrose, to interpose between rival Emperors, or to rule the conscience of the universal sovereign; or like Chrysostom, to enter into a perilous conflict with the vices of a capital and the intrigues of a court. Forced by the devout admiration of the people to assume the episcopate in the city of Hippo, he was faithful to his first bride, his earliest, though humble see. Not that his life was that of contemplative inactivity, or tranquil literary exertion; his personal conferences with the leaders of the Donatists. the Manicheans, the Arians, and Pelagians, and his presence in the councils of Carthage, displayed his power of dealing with men. His letter to Count Boniface showed that he was not unconcerned with the public affairs, and his former connection with Boniface, who at one time had expressed his determination to embrace the monastic life, might warrant his remonstrance against the fatal revolt, which involved Boniface and Africa in ruin.

^{*} He was thirty-five before he was chosen coadjutor to the was ordained presbyter, A.D. 389: Bishop of Hippo, A.D. 395.

At the close of his comparatively peaceful life, Augustine was exposed to the trial of his severe and lofty principles; his faith and his superiority to the world were brought to the test in the fearful calamities which desolated the whole African No part of the empire had so long escaped; no part was so fearfully visited, as Africa by the invasion of the Vandals. The once prosperous and fruitful region presented to the view only ruined cities, burning villages, a population thinned by the sword, bowed to slavery, and exposed to every kind of torture and mutilation. these fierce barbarians, the awful presence of Christianity imposed no respect. The churches were not exempt from the general ruin, the bishops and clergy from cruelty and death, the dedicated virgins In many places the from worse than death. services of religion entirely ceased from the extermination of the worshippers, or the flight of the To Augustine, as the supreme authority in matters of faith or conduct, was submitted the grave question of the course to be pursued by the clergy; whether they were to seek their own security, or to confront the sword of the ravager. The advice of Augustine was at once lofty and discreet. Where the flock remained, it was cowardice, it was impiety, in the clergy to desert them, and to deprive them in those disastrous times of the consolatory offices of religion, their children of baptism, themselves of the holy Eucharist. But where the priest was an especial object of persecution, and his place might be supplied by another; where the flock was massacred or dispersed, or had abandoned their homes, the clergy might follow them, and if possible provide for their own security.

CHAP. X.

Augustine did not fall below his own high notions of Christian, of episcopal duty. When the Vandal army gathered around Hippo, one of the few cities which still afforded a refuge for the persecuted provincials, he refused, though more than seventy years old, to abandon his post. In the third month of the siege he was released by death, and escaped the horrors of the capture, the cruelties of the conqueror, and the desolation of his church.*

A. D. 430.

^{*} In the life of Augustine, I with the passages in his Confessions have chiefly consulted that prefixed to his works, and Tillemont, CHAP. XI.

CHAP. XI.

JEROME. THE MONASTIC SYSTEM.

Though not so directly or magisterially dominant Jerome. over the Christianity of the West, the influence of Jerome has been of scarcely less importance than that of Augustine. Jerome was the connecting link between the East and the West; through him, as it were, passed over into the Latin hemisphere of Christendom that which was still necessary for its permanence and independence during the succeeding ages. The time of separation approached, when the Eastern and Western empires, the Latin and the Greek languages, were to divide the world. Western Christianity was to form an entirely separate system; the different nations and kingdoms which were to arise out of the wreck of the Roman empire were to maintain, each its national church. but there was to be a permanent centre of unity in that of Rome, considered as the common parent and federal head of Western Christendom. before this vast and silent revolution took place, certain preparations, in which Jerome was chiefly instrumental, gave strength, and harmony, and vitality to the religion of the West, from which the precious inheritance has been secured to modern Europe.

The two leading transactions in which Jerome took the effective part, were — 1st, the introduction, or at least the general reception, of Monachism in the West; 2d, the establishment of an authoritative and universally recognised version of the sacred writings into the Latin language. For both these important services, Jerome qualified himself by his visits to the East; he was probably the first occidental (though born in Dalmatia, he may be almost considered a Roman, having passed all his youth in that city) who became completely naturalised and domiciliated in Judæa; and his example, though it did not originate, strengthened to an extraordinary degree the passion for pilgrimages to the Holy Land; a sentiment in later times productive of such vast and unexpected results. In the earlier period, the repeated devastations of that devoted country, and still more its occupation by the Jews, had overpowered the natural veneration of the Christians for the scene of the life and sufferings of the Redeemer. It was an accursed rather than a holy region, desecrated by the presence of the murderers of the Lord, rather than endeared by the reminiscences of his personal ministry and expiatory death. The total ruin of the Jews, and their expulsion from Jerusalem by Hadrian; their dispersion into other lands, with the simultaneous progress of Christianity in Palestine, and their settlement in Ælia, the Roman Jerusalem, notwithstanding the profanation of that city by idolatrous emblems, allowed those more gentle and sacred feelings to grow up in strength and silence.*

BOOK

* Augustine asserts that the whole world flocked to Bethlehem to see the dung-heap on which Jobsate. t. ii. p. 59. For 180 years, according to Irone, from Hadrian to Con-life, whoever had attained to any proficiency in gion, in Gaul, or in the secluded island of tain, was eager to obtain a personal knowledge these hallowed places. They were met by ngers from Armenia, Persia, India (the Southern bia), Æthiopia, the countless monks of Egypt, from the whole of Western Asia.* Yet Jerome , no doubt, the most influential pilgrim to the ly Land; the increasing and general desire to t the soil printed, as it were, with the footsteps, moist with the redeeming blood of the Saviour, be traced to his writings, which opened as it e a constant and easy communication, and eslished an intercourse, more or less regularly ntained, between Western Europe and Palestine.† examina. ine, the statue of Jupiter occuthe place of the resurrection, statue of Venus was worship-Oper. Epist. xliv. p. 551. in the rock of Calvary. But as bject of Hadrian was to insult eady, before the time of Jerome, pilgrims had CHAP. red from all quarters of the world; and during ewish, not the Christian, reliit seems not very credible that two sites should be chosen he Heathen temples. Hiero-Oper. Epist. xlix. p. 505. Quicunque in Gallia fuerat pri-huc properat. Divisus ab orbe o Britannus, si in religione sserit, occiduo sole dimisso, it locum famà sibi tantum, et turarum relatione cognitum. referamus Armenios, quid 18, quid Indiæ, quid Æthiopiæ los, ipsamque juxta Ægyptum, m monachorum, Pontum et adociam, Syriam, Cretam, et potamiam cunctaque orientis

This is the letter of a Roman female, Paula. Hieronym.

† See the glowing description of all the religious wonders in the Holy Land in the Epitaphium Paulæ. An epistle, however, of Gregory of Nyssen strongly remonstrates against pilgrimages to the Holy Land, even from Cappadocia. He urges the dangers and suspicions to which pious recluses, especially women, would be subject with male attendants, either strangers or friends, on a lonely road; the dissolute words and sights which may be unavoidable in the inns; the dangers of robbery and violence in the Holy Land itself, of the mo-ral state of which he draws a fearful picture. He asserts the religious superiority of Cappadocia,

But besides this subordinate, if indeed subordinate, effect of Jerome's peculiar position between the East and West, he was thence both incited and enabled to accomplish his more immediately influential undertakings. In Palestine and in Egypt, Jerome became himself deeply imbued with the spirit of Monachism, and laboured with all his zeal to awaken the more tardy West to rival Egypt and Syria in displaying this sublime perfection of Christianity. By his letters, descriptive of the purity, the sanctity, the total estrangement from the deceitful world in these blessed retirements, he kindled the holy emulation, especially of the females, in Rome. Matrons and virgins of patrician families embraced with contagious fervour, the monastic life; and though the populous districts in the neighbourhood of the metropolis were not equally favourable for retreat, yet they attempted to practise the rigid observances of the desert in the midst of the busy metropolis.

For the second of his great achievements, the version of the sacred Scriptures, Jerome derived inestimable advantages, and acquired unprecedented authority, by his intercourse with the East. His residence in Palestine familiarised him with the language and peculiar habits of the sacred writers.

which had more churches than any part of the world; and inquires, in plain terms, whether a man will believe the virgin birth of Christ the more by seeing Bethlehem, or his resurrection by visiting his tomb, or his ascension by standing on the Mount of Olives. Greg. Nyss. de cunt. Hieros.

The authenticity of this epistle is indeed contested by Roman Catholic writers; but I can see no internal evidence against its genuineness. Jerome's more sober letter to Paulinus, Epist. xxix. vol. iv. p. 563., should also be compared.

was the first Christian writer of note who ught it worth while to study Hebrew. it the language alone; the customs, the topophy, the traditions, of Palestine were carefully ected, and applied by Jerome, if not always with soundest judgment, yet occasionally with great city and success to the illustration of the sacred tings.

CHAP.

The influence of Monachism upon the manners, Monachnions, and general character of Christianity, as l as that of the Vulgate translation of the Bible. only on the religion, but on the literature of rope, appear to demand a more extensive investtion; and as Jerome, if not the representative, s the great propagator of Monachism in the est, and as about this time this form of Chrisnity overshadowed and dominated throughout whole of Christendom, it will be a fit occasion, rough we have in former parts of this work not n able altogether to avoid it, to develope more y its origin and principles.

it is singular to see this oriental influence sucsively enslaving two religions in their origin l in their genius so totally opposite to Mothism as Christianity and the religion of Moham-Both gradually and unreluctantly yield to slow and inevitable change. Christianity, with v slight authority from the precepts, and none n the practice of the Author and first teachers, nitted this without inquiry as the perfection l consummation of its own theory. Its advoes and their willing auditors equally forgot that OL. III.

BOOK

if Christ and his apostles had retired into the desert, Christianity would never have spread beyond the wilderness of Judga. The transformation which afterwards took place of the fierce And marauder, or the proselyte to the martial creed of the Koran, into a dreamy dervish, was hardly more violent and complete, than that of the disciple of the great example of Christian virtue, or of the active and popular Paul, into a solitary anchorite.

Canabitlom.

Still that which might appear most adverse to the universal dissemination of Christianity eventually tended to its entire and permanent is corporation with the whole of society. Eremitism gave place to Comobitism: when the hermitage grew up into a convent, the estblishment of these religious fraternities in the wildest solitudes gathered round them a Christian community, or spread, as it were, a gradually increasing belt of Christian worship, which was maintained by the spiritual services of the monks, who, though not generally ordained as ecclesiastics, furnished a constant supply for ordination. In this manner, the rural districts, which, in most parts, long after Christianity had gained the predominance in the towns, remained attached by undisturbed habit to the ancient superstition, were slowly brought within the pale of the religion. The monastic communities commenced, in the more remote and less populous districts of the Roman world, that ameliorating change which, at later times, they carried on beyond the frontiers. As afterwards they introduced civilisation and Christianity among the barbarous tribes of North CHAP. Germany or Poland, so now they continued in all. parts a quiet but successful aggression on the urking Paganism.

Monachism was the natural result of the incor- Origin of poration of Christianity with the prevalent opi- ism, nions of mankind, and in part of the state of profound excitement into which it had thrown the human mind. We have traced the universal predominance of the great principle, the inherent evil of matter. This primary tenet, as well of the Eastern religions as of the Platonism of the West, coincided with the somewhat ambiguous use of the term world in the sacred writings. were alike the irreclaimable domain of the Adversary of good. The importance assumed by the soul, now through Christianity become profoundly conscious of its immortality, tended to the same end. The deep and serious solicitude for the fate of that everlasting part of our being, the concentration of all its energies on its own individual welfare, withdrew it entirely within itself. kind of sublime selfishness excluded all subordinate considerations.* The only security against the corruption which environed it on all sides seemed principles. It is always argued with relation to the interests and the perfection of the individual soul; and even with regard to that, the writers seem almost unconscious of the softening and humanising effect of the natural affections. the beauty of parental tenderness and filial love.

[•] It is remarkable how rarely, if ever (I cannot call to mind an instance), in the discussions on the comparative merits of marriage and celibacy, the social advantages ap-Pear to have occurred to the mind; the benefit to mankind of raising up a race born from Christian parents and brought up in Christian enter alternation from the contagion of matter; the constant marantzation, the extinction, if possible of those senses which were necessarily keeping up a dangerous and treasonable correspondence with the external analysis. On the other hand, entire estrangement from the rest of mankind, included in the prescribed and infectious world, appeared to less indispensable. Communion with God alone was at once the sole refuge and perfection of the abstracted spirit; praver the sole unendangered or cupation, alternating only with that coarse industry which might give employment to the refractory members, and provide that scanty sustenance required by the inalienable infirmity of corporeal existence. The fears and the hope were equally wrought upon — the fear of defilenent and consequently of eternal perdition: the hope of attaining the serene enjoyment of the divine presence in the life to come. If any mought of love to mankind, as an unquestionable curv entailed by Christian brotherhood, intruded on the isolated being, thus labouring on the single inject, his own spiritual perfection, it found a vent in prayer for their happiness, which excused all more series or effective benevolence.

333 SAVA

Celibacy

On both principles, of course, marriage was inexorably condemned.* Some expressions in the writings of St. Pault, and emulation of the Grastic fully into the origin and courquences of celibacy in the while church.

^{*} There is a sensible and judicious book, entitled "Die Entführung der Erzwungenen Ehelosigkeit bei dem Christlichen und ihre Folge," von J. A. und Aug. Theiner, Altenburg, 1828, which enters

[†] I agree with Theiner (p. 24) in considering these precepts less and temporary, relating to the bining with these general sentiments, early raised celibacy into the highest of virtues: marriage was a necessary evil, ble infirmity of the weaker brethren. nore rational and earlier writers, Cyprian, and even in occasional passages in or Augustine, it had its own high and cellence; but even with them, virginity, the estrangement from all sensual inwas the transcendant virtue, the present of the angelic state, the approximation diffied existence.*

ning conspired to promote, nothing recounteract, this powerful impulse. In the inces of those whom seed.

al tone was that of erome. There must sels of gold and silod and earthenware. trous admission of of the married life the orthodox from the Montanist, and Jerom. adv. Jovin.

nts of the Fathers ad virginity may be ed. I am not speaknce to the marriage which will be consiwriters, when they with the Gnostics, wate virginity above k very strongly on even the implety, of disparaging lawful y acknowledge and ted fact that several were married. This is the tone of Ignatius (Cotel. Pat. Apost. ii. 77.), of Tertullian (licebat et Apostolis nubere et uxores circumducere. De Exhort. Castit.), above all, of Clement of Alexandria.

In the time of Cyprian, vows of virginity were not irrevocable. Si autem perseverare nolunt, vel non possunt. melius est ut nubant, quam in ignem delictis suis cadant. Epist. 62. And his general language, more particularly his tract de Habitu Virginum, implies that strong discipline was necessary to restrain the dedicated virgins from the vanities of the world.

But in the fourth century the eloquent Fathers vie with each other in exalting the transcendant, holy, angelic virtue of virginity. Every one of the more distinguished writers,—Basil, the two Gregories, Ambrose, Augustine, Chrysostom, has a treatise or treatises upon virginity, on which he expands with all the glowing language which he can command. It became

CHAP. XI.

as the ser ation from the world was by no means . . unnor. Even among the busy and restless the philosophers had asserted the ... ex x wisdom to stand aloof from the rest maisari: the question of the superior ex-= .= to the active or the contemplative life had ser and an equal terms. But in some regions a me me me salary and oppressive heats, the where relation of the physical system, dispose constitutions of a certain temperament to a dreamy Te indolence and prostration of the body produce a kind of activity in the mind, if that may properly be called activity which is merely giving loose to the imagination and the emotions, as they follow out a wild train of incoherent thought, or are agitated by impulses of spontaneous and ungoverned feeling. Conscianity ministered new aliment to this common unicensity; it gave an object both vague and color ate enough to stimulate, yet never to sees a expanst. The regularity of stated hours a graph, and of a kind of idle industry, weaving

The self-special section of the sect

Pur Jerome is the most remained of the Pur Jerome is the most renement of and the same of the same and the constant of the same See and the form of the second number of the first of the ere in the second section of the life mats, or plaiting baskets, alternated with periods CHAP. of morbid reflection on the moral state of the soul. and of mystic communion with the Deity.* cannot, indeed, be wondered that the new revelation, as it were, of the Deity; this profound and rational certainty of his existence; this infelt consciousness of his perpetual presence; these yet unknown impressions of his infinity, his power, and his love, should give a higher character to this eremitical enthusiasm, and attract men of loftier and more vigorous minds within its sphere. It was not merely the pusillanimous dread of encountering the trials of life which urged the humbler spirits to seek the safe retirement, or the natural love of peace, and the weariness and satiety of life, which commended this seclusion to those who were too gentle to mingle in, or who were exhausted with, the unprofitable turmoil of the world. Nor was it always the anxiety to mortify the rebellious and refractory body with more advantage; the one absorbing idea of the majesty of the Godhead almost seemed to swallow up all other considerations; the transcendant nature of the Triune Deity, the relation of the different persons in the Godhead to each other, seemed the only worthy

* Nam pariter exercentes cororis animæque virtutes, exterioris iominis stipendia cum emolumentis nterioris exæquant, lubricis motirus cordis, et fluctuationi cogitaionum instabili, operum pondera, tineri. Cassian. Instit. ii. 13.

velut quandam tenacem atque immobilem anchoram præfigentes, cui volubilitas ac pervagatio cordis innexa intra cellæ claustra, velut in portu fidissimo valeat con-objects of man's contemplative faculties. If the soul never aspired to that Pantheistic union with

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY.

i

the spiritual essence of being which is the supreme ambition of the higher Indian mysticism, their theory seemed to promise a sublime estrangement from all sublunary things, an occupation for the spirit, already, as it were, disembodied and immaterialised by its complete concentration on the Deity.

In Syria and in Egypt, as well as in the remoter East, the example had already been set both of solitary retirement and of religious communities. The Jews had both their hermitages and their econobitic institutions. Anchorites swarmed in the deserts near the Dead Sea*; and the Essenes, in the same district, and the Egyptian Therapeutae, were strictly analogous to the Christian monastic establishments. In the neighbourhood of many of the Eastern cities were dreary and dismal wastes incapable of, or unimproved by, cultivation, which seemed to allure the enthusiast to abandon the haunts of men and the vices of society. Egypt especially, where every thing excessive and extravagant found its birth or ripened with unexampled vigour, seemed formed for the encouragement of the wildest anchoritism. It is a long narrow valley, closed in on each side by craggy or by sandy deserts. The rocks were pierced either with natural caverns, or hollowed out by the hand of man into long subterranean cells and galleries for various uses, either of life, or of superstition, or of sepulture. The Christian, sometimes driven out by persecution (for persecution no doubt greatly contributed to people these solitudes*), or prompted by religious feelings, to fly from the face of man, found himself, with no violent effort, in a dead and voiceless wilderness, under a climate which required no other shelter than the ceiling of the rock-hewn cave, and where actual sustenance might be obtained with little difficulty.

CHAP.

St. Antony is sometimes described as the founder Antony. of the monastic life; it is clear, however, that he only imitated and excelled the example of less famous anchorites. But he may fairly be considered as its representative.

Antony† was born of Christian parents, bred up in the faith, and before he was twenty years old, found himself master of considerable wealth, and charged with the care of a younger sister. He was a youth of ardent imagination, vehement impulses, and so imperfectly educated as to be acquainted with no language but his native Egyptian. constant attendant on Christian worship, he had long looked back with admiration on those primitive times when the Christians laid all their worldly goods at the feet of the Apostles. One day he heard the sentence, "Go, sell all thou hast, and give to the poor, * * and come, and follow me." It seemed personally addressed to himself by the voice of God. He returned home, distributed his being the first hermit for Paul, in the time of Decius or Valerian, (Vit. Paul. p. 68.); but the whole life of Paul, and the visit of Antony to him, read like religious romance, and, from the preface of Jerome to the Life of Hilarion, did not find implicit credit in his own ^{*} Paul, the first Christian hermit, fled from persecution. Hiero-

nym. Vit. Paul. p. 69.

† The fact that the great Athanasius paused in his polemic war-fare to write the life of Antony, may show the general admiration towards the monastic life.

¹ Jerome claims the honour of lands among his neighbours, sold his furniture and other effects, except a small sum reserved for his sister, whom he placed under the care of some pious Christian virgins. Another text, "Take no thought for the morrow," transpierced his heart, and sent him forth for ever from the society of men. He found an aged solitary, who dwelt without the He was seized with pious emulation, and from that time devoted himself to the severest There was still, however, something asceticism. gentle and humane about the asceticism of Antony. His retreat (if we may trust the romantic life of St. Hilarion, in the works of St. Jerome), was by no means of the horrid and savage character affected by some other recluses: it was at the foot of a high and rocky mountain, from which welled forth a stream of limpid water, bordered by palms, which afforded an agreeable shade. Antony had planted this pleasant spot with vines and shrubs; there was an enclosure for fruit trees and vegetables, and a tank from which the labour of Antony irrigated his garden. His conduct and character seemed to partake of this less stern and gloomy tendency.* He visited the most distinguished anchorites, but only to observe, that he might imitate the peculiar virtue of each; the gentle disposition of one; the constancy of prayer in another; the kindness, the patience, the industry, the vigils, the macerations, the love of study, the passionate contemplation of the Deity, the charity towards mankind. his devout ambition to equal or transcend each in his particular austerity, or distinctive excellence.

^{*} Vita St. Hilarion. p. 85.

But man does not violate nature with impunity; the solitary state had its passions, its infirmities, its perils. The hermit could fly from his fellow Demonmen, but not from himself. The vehement and fervid temperament which drove him into the desert was not subdued; it found new ways of giving loose to its suppressed impulses. The selfcentred imagination began to people the desert with worse enemies than mankind. Dæmonology, in all its multiplied forms, was now an established part of the Christian creed, and embraced with the greatest ardour by men in such a state of religious excitement, as to turn hermits. The trials, the temptations, the agonies, were felt and described as personal conflicts with hosts of impure, malignant, furious, fiends. In the desert, these beings took visible form and substance; in the day-dreams of profound religious meditation, in the visions of the agitated and exhausted spirit, they were undiscernible from reality.* It is impossible, in the wild legends which became an essential part of Christian literature, to decide how much is the disordered imagination of the saint, the self-deception of the credulous, or the fiction of the zealous writer. The very effort to suppress certain feelings has a natural tendency to awaken and strengthen them. The horror of carnal indulgence would not permit the sensual desires to die away into apathy. Men are apt to find what they seek in their own hearts, and by anxiously searching for ^{*} Compare Jerome's Life of St. Hilarion, p. 76.

BOOK IIL

the guilt of lurking lust, or desire of worldly wealth or enjoyment, the conscience, as it were, struck forcibly upon the chord which it wished to deaden, and made it vibrate with a kind of morbid, but more than ordinary, energy. Nothing was so licentious or so terrible as not to find its way to the cell of the recluse. Beautiful women danced around him; wild beasts of every shape, and monsters with no shape at all, howled and yelled and shrieked about him, while he knelt in prayer, or snatched his broken slumbers. "Oh how often in the desert." says Jerome, "in that vast solitude, which, parched by the sultry sun, affords a dwelling to the monks, did I fancy myself in the midst of the luxuries of Rome. I sate alone, for I was full of bitterness. My misshapen limbs were rough with sackloth; and my skin was so squalid that I might have been taken for a negro. Tears and groans were my occupation every day, and all day: if sleep surprised me unawares, my naked bones, which scarcely held together, clashed on the earth. will say nothing of my food or beverage: even the rich have nothing but cold water; any warm drink is a luxury. Yet even I, who for the fear of hell had condemned myself to this dungeon, the companion only of scorpions and wild beasts, was in the midst of girls dancing. My face was pale with fasting, but the mind in my cold body burned with desires; the fires of lust boiled up in the body, which was already dead. Destitute of all succour, I cast myself at the feet of Jesus, washed them with my tears, dried them with my hair, and ibdued the rebellious flesh by a whole week's sting." After describing the wild scenes into hich he fled, the deep glens and shaggy preciices, — "The Lord is my witness," he concludes; sometimes I appeared to be present among the ngelic hosts, and sang, 'We will haste after thee or the sweet savour of thy ointments." " * mes, on the other hand, gentle and more than uman voices were heard consoling the constant and evout recluse; and sometimes the baffled dæmon ould humbly acknowledge himself to be reaked before him. But this was in general after a arful struggle. Desperate diseases require desperate emedies. The severest pain could alone subdue or selfistract the refractory desires, or the preoccupied Human invention was exhausted in self-inicted torments. The Indian faquir was rivalled in ie variety of distorted postures and of agonising excises. Some lived in clefts and caves; some in huts, to which the light of day could not penetrate; me hung huge weights to their arms, necks, or ins; some confined themselves in cages; some on ie tops of mountains, exposed to the sun and eather. The most celebrated hermit at length r life condemned himself to stand in a fiery cliate, on the narrow top of a pillar.† Nor were

* Song of Solomon. Hieronym. pist. xxii.

† The language of Evagrius I. E. i. 13.) about Simeon vividly presses the effect which he made his own age. "Rivalling, self from all earthly things, and doing violence to nature, which always has a downward tendency, he aspired after that which is on high; and standing midway between earth and heaven, he had communile yet in the flesh, the conver-tion of angels, he withdrew him-with the angels; from the earth

HISTORY OF CHRISTIANITY.

ok these always rude or uneducated fanatics. St. Arsenius had filled, and with universal respect, the dignified post of tutor to the Emperor Arcadius. But Arsenius became an hermit; and, among other things, it is related of him, that, employing himself in the common occupation of the Egyptian monks, weaving baskets of palm leaves, he changed only once a year the water in which the leaves were moistened. The smell of the fetid water was a just penalty for the perfumes which he had inhaled during his worldly life. Even sleep was a sin; an hour's unbroken slumber was sufficient for a monk. On Saturday evening, Arsenius laid down with his back to the setting sun, and continued awake, in fervent prayer, till the rising sun shone on his eyes*; so far had Christianity departed from its humane and benevolent and social simplicity.

It may be a curious question how far enthusiasm repays its votaries as far as the individual is concerned; in what degree these self-inflicted tortures added to or diminished the real happiness of man; how far these privations and bodily sufferings, which to the cool and unexcited reason appear intolerable, either themselves produced a callous insensibility, or were met by apathy arising out of the strong counter-excitement of the mind; to what offering supplications ($\pi\rho\epsilon\sigma\delta\epsilon i\alpha_c$) in the air ($\pi\alpha\nu\alpha\gamma i\sigma\nu$ καὶ ἀερίου μάρ- $\tau\nu\rho\sigma\gamma$) as an ambassador to God; bringing down from heaven to men the divine blessing." The influence of the most holy martyr *Compare Fleury, xx. 1.2.

extent, if still felt in unmitigated anguish, they were compensated by inward complacency from the conscious fulfilment of religious duty; the stern satisfaction of the will at its triumph over nature; the elevation of mind from the consciousness of the great object in view, or the ecstatic pre-enjoyment of certain reward. In some instances, they might derive some recompense from the respect, veneration, almost adoration, of men. Emperors visited the cells of these ignorant, perhaps superstitious, fanatics, revered them as oracles, and conducted the affairs of empire by their advice. The great Theodosius is said to have consulted John the Solitary on the issue of the war with Eugenius. His feeble successors followed faithfully the example of his superstition.

Antony appeared at the juncture most favourable Influence for the acceptance of his monastic tenets.† fame and his example tended still further to disseminate the spreading contagion. In every part the desert began to swarm with anchorites, who found it difficult to remain alone. Some sought out the most retired chambers of the ancient cemeteries: some those narrow spots which remained above water during the inundations, and saw with pleasure the tide arise which was to render them unapproachable to their fellow-creatures. But in all parts the determined solitary found himself constantly obliged to recede farther and farther; he could scarcely find a retreat so dismal, a cavern so profound, a rock so inaccessible, but that he would be pressed upon by some zealous competitor, or invaded by the humble veneration of some disciple.

^{*} Evagr. Vit. St. Paul. c. l. + Hujus vitæ auctor Paulus Theodoret, v. 24. See Flechier, illustrator Antonius. Jerom. p. 46. Vie de Theodose, iv. 43.

It is extraordinary to observe this infringement on the social system of Christianity, this disconnecting principle, which, pushed to excess, might appear fatal to that organisation in which so much of the strength of Christianity consisted, gradually self-expanding into a new source of power and energy, so wonderfully adapted to the age. The desire of the anchorite to isolate himself in unendangered seclusion was constantly balanced and corrected by the holy zeal or involuntary tendency to proselytism. The farther the saint retired from the habitations of men, the brighter and more attractive became the light of his sanctity; the more he concealed himself, the more was he sought out by a multitude of admiring and emulous followers. Each built or occupied his cell in the hallowed neighbourhood. A monastery was thus imperceptibly formed around the hermitage; and nothing was requisite to the incorporation of a regular community, but the formation of rules for common intercourse, stated meetings for worship, and something of uniformity in dress, food, and daily occupations. Some monastic establishments were no doubt formed at once, in imitation of the Jewish Therapeutæ; but many of the more celebrated Egyptian establishments gathered, as it were, around the central cell of an Antony or Pachomius.*

^{*} Pachomius was, strictly speaking, the founder of the comobilities in Armenia; Basil in Asia.

Something like an uniformity of usage appears to have prevailed in the Egyptian monasteries. brothers were dressed, after the fashion of the coun- Comobities try, in long linen tunics, with a woollen girdle, establic ments. a cloak, and over it a sheep-skin. They usually went barefooted, but at certain very cold or very parching seasons, they wore a kind of sandal. They did not wear the hair-cloth.* Their food was bread and water; their luxuries, occasionally a little oil or salt, a few olives, peas, or a single fig: they ate in perfect silence, each decury by itself. They were bound to strict obedience to their superiors; they were divided into decuries and centenaries, over whom the decurions and centurions presided: each had his separate cell.† The furniture of their cells was a mat of palm leaves and a bundle of the papyrus, which served for a pillow by night and a seat by day. Every evening and every night they were summoned to prayer by the sound of a horn. At each meeting were sung twelve psalms, pointed out, it was believed, by an angel. On certain occasions, lessons were read from the Old or New Testament. The assembly preserved total silence; nothing was heard but the voice of the chanter or reader. No one dared even to look at another.

Pachomius had 1400 monks in his establishment; 7000 acknowledged his jurisdiction.

to think it often a sign of pride. Instit. i. 3.

Jerome speaks of the cilicium as common among the Syrian monks, with whom he lived. Epist. i. Horrent sacco membra deformi. Even women assumed it. Epitaph. Paulæ, p. 678. Cassian is inclined

⁺ The accounts of Jerome (in Eustochium, p. 45.) and of Cassian are blended. There is some difference as to the hours of meeting for prayers, but probably the comobitic institutes differed as to that and on some points of diet.

BOOK

The tears of the audience alone, or if he spoke of the joys of eternal beatitude, a gentle murmur of hope, was the only sound which broke the stillness of the auditory. At the close of each psalm, the whole assembly prostrated itself in mute adoration.* In every part of Egypt, from the Cataracts to the Delta, the whole land was bordered by these communities; there were 5000 composites in the desert of Nitria alone †; the total number of male anchorites and monks was estimated at 76,000; the females at 27,700. Parts of Syria were, perhaps, scarcely less densely peopled with ascetics. Cappadocia and the provinces bordering on Persia boasted of numerous communities, as well as Asia Minor and the eastern parts of Europe. Though the monastic spirit was in its full power, the establishment of regular communities in Italy must be reserved for Benedict of Nursia, and lies beyond the bounds of our present history. The enthusiasm pervaded all orders. Men of rank, of family, of wealth, of education, suddenly changed the luxurious palace for the howling wilderness, the flatteries of men for the total silence of the desert. They voluntarily abandoned their estates, their connections, their worldly prospects.

* Tantum a cunctis præbetur silentium, ut cum in unum tam numerosa fratrum multitudo conveniat, præter illum, qui consurgens psalmum decantat in medio, nullus hominum penitus adesse credatur. No one was heard to spit, to sneeze, to cough, or to yawn—there was not even a sigh or a groan—nisi fortè hæc quæ per excessum mentis claustra oris effugerit, quæque insensibiliter cordiobrepserit, immoderato scilicet atque intolerabili spiritûs fervore succenso, dum ea quæ ignita mens in semetipså non prævalet contnere, per ineffabilem quendam gemitum pectoris sui conclavibus evaporare conatur. Cassian. Institii. 10.

+ Jerom. ad Eustoch. p. 44-desire of fame, of power, of influence, which might CHAP. now swell the ranks of the ecclesiastics, had no concern in their sacrifice. Multitudes must have perished without the least knowledge of their virtues or their fate transpiring in the world. could obtain or hope to obtain the honour of canonisation, or that celebrity which Jerome promises to his friend Blesilla, to live not merely in heaven, but in the memory of man; to be consecrated to immortality by his writings. *

gers no less than the cell of the solitary hermit. conobitism. Besides those consequences of seclusion from the world, the natural results of confinement in this close separation from mankind and this austere discharge of stated duties, were too often found to be the proscription of human knowledge and the extinction of human sympathies. Christian wisdom and Christian humanity could find no place in their unsocial system. A morose, and sullen, and contemptuous ignorance could not but grow up where there was no communication with the rest of mankind, and the human understanding was rigidly confined to certain topics. The want of objects of natural affection could not but harden the heart; and

But the comobitic establishments had their dan- Dangers of merciless to themselves, are apt to be merciless to Bigotry.

those who, in their stern religious austerity are others †: their callous and insensible hearts have ^{*} Quæ cum Christo vivit in cœlis, in hominum quoque ore victura est. * * Nunquam in meis moritura est libris. Epist. xxiii. p. 60.

abbot, Mucius, in Cassian. Mucius entreated admission into a monast.  Nunquam in meis moritura t libris. Epist. xxiii. p. 60. him of eight years old. They were † There is a cruel history of an no sense of the exquisitely delicate and poignant feelings which arise out of the domestic affections. Bigotry has always found its readiest and sternest executioners among those who have never known the charities of life.

BOOK

These fatal effects seem inherent consequences of Monasticism; its votaries could not but degenerate from their lofty and sanctifying purposes. That which in one generation was sublime enthusiasm, in the next became sullen bigotry, or sometimes wrought the same individual into a stern forgetfulness, not only of the vices and follies, but of all the more generous and sacred feelings of humanity. In the comobitic institutes was added a strong corporate spirit, and a blind attachment to their own opinions, which were identified with religion and the glory of God. The monks of Nitria, from simple and harmless enthusiasts, became ferocious bands of partisans; instead of remaining aloof in jealous seclusion from the factions of the rest of the world, they rushed down armed into Alexandria: what they consi> father's heart should be softened and indisposed to total renunciation of all earthly joys, by the sight of his child. That he might still farther prove his Christian obedience!! and self-denial, the child was systematically neglected, dressed in rags, and so dirty, as to be disgusting to the father; he was frequently beaten, to try whether it would force tears down the parent's squalid cheeks. "Nevertheless, for the love of Christ!!! and from the virtue of obedience, the heart of as an act of the high the father remained hard and unheroism! Lib. iv. 27.

Fanaticism.

moved," thinking little of his child's tears, only of his own humility and perfection. length was urged to show the last mark of his submission by throwing the child into the river. As if this was a commandment of God, he seized the child, and "the work of faith and obedience "would have been accomplished, if the brethren had not interposed, "and, as it were, rescued the child from the waters." And Cassian relates this as an act of the highest religious dered a sacred cause inflamed and warranted a ferocity not surpassed by the turbulent and bloodthirsty rabble of that city. In support of a favourite doctrine, or in defence of a popular prelate, they did not consider that they were violating their own first principles, in yielding to all the savage passions, and mingling in the bloody strife of that world which they had abandoned.

CHAP.

Total seclusion from mankind is as dangerous to enlightened religion as to Christian charity. might have expected to find among those who separated themselves from the world, to contemplate, undisturbed, the nature and perfections of the Deity, Ignorance. in general, the purest and most spiritual notions of the Godhead. Those whose primary principle was dread of a corruption of matter would be the last coarsely to materialise their divinity. But those who could elevate their thoughts, or could maintain them at this height, were but a small part of the vast numbers, whom the many mingled motives of zeal, superstition, piety, pride, emulation, or distaste for the world, led into the desert; they required something more gross and palpable than the fine and subtle conception of a spiritual being. Superstition, not content with crowding the brain with imaginary figments, spread its darkening mists over the Deity himself.

It was among the monks of Egypt that anthropomorphism assumed its most vulgar and obstinate form. They would not be persuaded that the expressions in the sacred writings which ascribe human acts, and faculties, and passions to the Deity were to be understood as a condescension to the weakness of our nature; they seemed disposed to compensate to themselves for the loss of human society by degrading the Deity, whom they professed to be their sole companion, to the likeness of man. tion could not maintain its flight, and they could not summon reason, which they surrendered with the rest of their dangerous freedom, to supply its place; and generally superstition demanded and received the same implicit and resolute obedience religion itself. Once having humanised the Deity, they could not be weaned from the object of their worship. The great cause of quarrel between Theophilus, the Archbishop of Alexandria, and the monks of the adjacent establishments, was his vain attempt to enlighten them on those points to which they obstinately adhered, as the vital and essential part of their faith.

Pride, moreover, is almost the necessary result of such distinctions as the monks drew between themselves and the rest of mankind; and prejudice and obstinacy are the natural fruits of pride. Once having embraced opinions, however, as in this instance, contrary to their primary principles, small communities are with the utmost difficulty induced to surrender those tenets in which they support and strengthen each other by the general concurrence. The anthropomorphism of the Egyptian monks resisted alike argument and authority. The bitter and desperate remonstrance of the aged Serapion, when he was forced to surrender his anthropomorphic notions of the Deity, —"You have deprived me of my God*," shows not merely the degraded intellectual state of the monks of Egypt, but the incapacity of the mass of mankind to keep up such high-wrought and imaginative conceptions. Enthusiasm of any particular kind wastes itself as soon as its votaries become numerous; it may hand down its lamp from individual to individual for many generations; but when it would include a whole section of society, it substitutes some new incentive, strong party or corporate feeling, habit, advantage, or the pride of exclusiveness, for its original disinterested zeal; and can never for a long period adhere to its original principles.

The effect of Monachism on Christianity, and on General society at large, was of very mingled character. Monach-Its actual influence on the population of the empire ism on Christianwas probably not considerable, and would scarcely ity. counterbalance the increase arising out of the superior morality, as regards sexual intercourse, introduced by the Christian religion.† Some apprehensions, indeed, were betrayed on this point, and when the opponents of Monachism urged, Cassian Collat. x. 1.

† There is a curious passage of St. Ambrose on this point. "Si quis igitur putat, conservatione virginum minui genus humanum, consideret, quia, ubi paucæ virgines, ibi etiam pauciores homines: ubi virginitatis studia crebriora, ibi numerum quoque hominum esse majorem. Dicite, quantas Alex-andrina, totiusque Orientis, et Africana ecclesia, quotannis sa-crare consueverint. Pauciores hic homines prodeunt, quamillic virgines consecrantur." We should wish to know whether there was any statistical ground for this singular assertion, that, in those regions in which celibacy was most practised, the population increased — or whether Egypt, the East, and Africa, were generally more prolific than Italy, The assertion that the vows of virginity in those countries exceeded the births in the latter is, most probably, to be set down to antithesis.

that if such principles were universally admitted, the human race would come to an end, its resolute advocates replied, that the Almighty, if necessary, would appoint new means for the propagation of mankind.

On political affairs,

The withdrawal of so much ardour, talent, and virtue into seclusion, which, however elevating to the individual, became altogether unprofitable to society, might be considered a more serious objec-The barren world could ill spare any active or inventive mind. Public affairs, at this disastrous period, demanded the best energies which could be combined from the whole Roman world for their This dereliction of their social administration. duties by so many, could not but leave the competition more open to the base and unworthy, particularly as the actual abandonment of the world, and the capability of ardent enthusiasm, in men of high station, or of commanding intellect, displayed a force and independence of character which might, it should seem, have rendered important active service to mankind. If barbarians were admitted by a perilous, yet inevitable policy, into the chief military commands, was not this measure at least hastened, not merely by the general influence of Christianity. which reluctantly permitted its votaries to enter into the army, but still more by Monachism, which withdrew them altogether into religious inactivity? The civil and fiscal departments, and especially that of public education conducted by salaried professors, might also be deprived of some of the most eligible and useful candidates for employment. At a time of such acknowledged deficiency, it may have appeared little less than a treasonable indifference to the public welfare, to break all connection with mankind, and to dwell in unsocial seclusion entirely on individual interests. Such might have been the remonstrance of a sober and dispassionate Pagan*, and in part of those few more rational Christians, who could not consider the rigid monastic Christianity as the original religion of its divine founder.

CHAP. XI.

If, indeed, this peaceful enthusiasm had counteracted any general outburst of patriotism, or left vacant or abandoned to worthless candidates posts in the public service which could be commanded by great talents and honourable integrity. Monachism might fairly be charged with weakening the energies and deadening the resistance of the Roman empire to its gathering and multiplying adversaries. But the state of public affairs probably tended more to the growth of Monachism than Monachism to the disorder and disorganisation of public affairs. The partial and unjust distribution of the rewards of public service; the uncertainty of distinction in any career, which entirely depended on the favouritism and intrigue within the narrow circle of the court; the difficulty of emerging to eminence under a despotism by fair and honourable means; disgust and disappointment at slighted pretensions and baffled hopes; the general and apparently hopeless oppression which weighed down all mankind; the total extinction of the generous feelings of freedom; the conscious decrepitude of the human mind; the inevitable conviction that its productive energies in knowledge,

[·] Compare the law of Valens, de Monachis, quoted above, literature, and arts, were extinct and effete, and that every path was preoccupied, -all these concurrent motives might naturally, in a large proportion of the most vigorous and useful minds, generate a distaste and weariness of the world. Religion, then almost universally dominant, would seize on this feeling, and enlist it in her service: it would avail itself of, not produce, the despondent determination to abandon an ungrateful world; it would ennoble and exalt the preconceived motives for seclusion; give a kind of conscious grandeur to inactivity, and substitute a dreamy but elevating love for the Deity for contemptuous misanthropy, as the justification for the total desertion of social duty. Monachism. in short, instead of precipitating the fall of the Roman empire, by enfeebling in any great degree its powers of resistance, enabled some portion of mankind to escape from the feeling of shame and misery. Amid the irremediable evils and the wretchedness that could not be averted, it was almost a social benefit to raise some part of mankind to a state of serene indifference, to render some at least superior to the general calamities. Monachism, indeed, directly secured many in their isolation from all domestic ties, from that worst suffering inflicted by barbarous warfare, the sight of beloved females outraged, and innocent children butchered. In those times, the man was happiest who had least to lose, and who exposed the fewest vulnerable points of feeling or sympathy: the natural affections, in which, in ordinary times, consists the best happiness of man, were in those days such perilous

Some of its advantages.

lulgences, that he who was entirely detached m them embraced, perhaps, considering temral views alone, the most prudent course. itary could but suffer in his own person; and ough by no means secure in his sanctity from inlt, or even death, his self-inflicted privations rdened him against the former, his high-wrought thusiasm enabled him to meet the latter with lm resignation: he had none to leave whom had to lament, none to lament him after his The spoiler who found his way to his cret cell was baffled by his poverty; and the ord which cut short his days but shortened his inful pilgrimage on earth, and removed him at ce to an anticipated heaven. With what difent feelings would he behold, in his poor, and ked, and solitary cell, the approach of the bloodirsty barbarians, from the father of a family, in his lendid palace, or his more modest and comfortle private dwelling, with a wife in his arms, nose death he would desire to see rather than at worse than death to which she might first be omed in his presence; with helpless children inging around his knees: the blessings which he d enjoyed, the wealth or comfort of his house, e beauty of his wife, of his daughters, or even of s sons, being the strongest attraction to the spoiler, d irritating more violently his merciless and un-If to some the monastic state aring passions. fered a refuge for the sad remainder of their beaved life, others may have taken warning in ne, and with deliberate forethought refused to implicate themselves in tender connections, which were threatened with such deplorable end. Those, who secluded themselves from domestic relations, from other motives, at all events were secured from such miseries, and might be envied by those who had played the game of life with a higher stake, and ventured on its purest pleasures, with the danger of incurring all its bitterest reverses.

CHAP. XI.

Effect on the maintenance of Christianity,

Monachism tended powerfully to keep up the vital enthusiasm of Christianity. Allusion has been made to its close connection with the conversion both of the Roman and the Barbarian; and to the manner in which, from its settlement in some retired Pagan district, it gradually disseminated the faith, and sometimes the industrious, always the moral. influence of Christianity through the neighbourhood in a gradually expanding circle. Its peaceful colonies, within the frontier of Barbarism, slowly but uninterruptedly subdued the fierce or indolent savages to the religion of Christ and the manners and habits of civilisation. But its internal influence was not less visible, immediate, and inexhaustible. The more extensive dissemination of Christianity naturally weakened its authority. When the small primitive assembly of the Christians grewinto an universal church; when the village, the town, the city, the province, the empire, became in outward form and profession Christian, the practical Heathenism only retired to work more silently and imperceptibly into the Christian system. wider the circle, the fainter the line of distinction from the surrounding waters. Small societies have a kind of self-acting principle of conservation within. Mutual inspection generates mutual awe; the generous rivalry in religious attainment keeps up regularity in attendance on the sacred institutions, and at least propriety of demeanour. Such small communities may be disturbed by religious faction, but are long before they degenerate into unchristian licentiousness, or languish into reli-But when a large proportion of gious apathy. Christians received the faith as an inheritance from their fathers rather than from personal conviction; when hosts of deserters from Paganism passed over into the opposite camp, not because it was the best, but because it was the most flourishing cause; it became inexpedient, as well as impossible, to maintain the severer discipline of former But Monachism was constantly reorganising small societies, in which the bond of aggregation was the common religious fervour, in which emulation continually kept up the excitement, and mutual vigilance exercised unresisted authority. The exaggeration of their religious sentiments was at once the tenure of their existence, and the guarantee for their perpetuity. Men would never be wanting to enrol themselves in their ranks, and their constitution prevented them from growing to an unmanageable size; when one establishment or institution wore out, another was sure to spring up. The republics of Monachism were constantly reverting to their first principles, and undergoing a vigorous and thorough reformation. Thus, throughout the whole of Christian history, until, or even after, the Reformation, within the church of Rome, we find either new monastic orders rising, or the old remodelled and regulated by the zeal of some ardent enthusiast; the associatory principle, that great political and religious engine which is either the conservative or the destructive power in every period of society, was constantly embracing a certain number of persons devoted to a common end; and the new sect, distinguished by some peculiar badge of dress, of habit, or of monastic rule, re-embodied some of the fervour of primitive Christianity, and awakened the growing lethargy, by the example of unusual austerities, or rare and exemplary activity in the dissemination of the faith.

CHAP. XI.

The beneficial tendency of this constant formation of young and vigorous societies in the bosom of Christianity was of more importance in the times of desolation and confusion which impended over the Roman empire. In this respect, likewise. their lofty pretensions insured their utility. Where reason itself was about to be in abeyance, rational religion would have had but little chance: would have commanded no respect. Christianity. its primitive simple and unassuming form, might have imparted its holiness, and peace, and happiness, to retired families, whether in the city or the province, but its modest and retiring dignity would have made no impression on the general tone and character of society. There was something in the seclusion of religious men from mankind, in their standing aloof from the rest of the world, calculated to impress barbarous minds with a feeling of their peculiar sanctity. The less they were like to ordinary men, the more, in the ordinary estimation, they were approximated to the divinity. At all events, this apparently broad and manifest evidence of their religious sincerity would be more impressive to unreasoning minds than the habits of the clergy, which approached more nearly to those of the common laity.*

Influence

The influence of this continual rivalry of an- Influence other sacred, though not decidedly sacerdotal class, clergy. upon the secular clergy, led to important results. We may perhaps ascribe to the constant presence of Monachism the continuance and the final recognition of the celibacy of the clergy, the vital principle of the ecclesiastical power in the middle ages. Without the powerful direct support which they received from the monastic orders; without the indirect authority over the minds of men which flowed from their example, and inseparably connected, in the popular mind, superior sanctity with the renunciation of marriage, the ambitious popes would never have been able, particularly in the north, to part the clergy by this strong line of demarcation from the profane laity. As it was, it required the most vigorous and continued effort

The monks were originally laymen (Cassian, v. 26.); gradually churches were attached to the monasterios, but these were served by regularly ordained clergy.—(Pallad, Hist. Lausiaca.): but their reputation for sanctity constantly exposed them to be seized and consecrated by the ardent admiration of their followers. Theiner has collected with considerable labour a long list of the more celebrated prelates of the church who had been monks. p. 106. Ita ergo age et vive in monasterio, ut clericus esse merearis. Hieron. Epist. ad Rustic. 95.

BOOK 111. In promoting celibacy.

to establish, by ecclesiastical regulation and papal power, that which was no longer in accordance with the religious sentiments of the clergy them-The general practice of marriage, or of a kind of legalised concubinage, among the northern clergy, showed the tendency, if it had not been thus counteracted by the rival order, and by the dominant ecclesiastical policy of the Church.* But it is impossible to calculate the effect of that complete blending up of the clergy with the rest of the community which would probably have ensued from the gradual abrogation of this single distinction at this juncture. The interests of their order, in men connected with the community by the ordinary social ties, would have been secondary to their own personal advancement, or that of their families. They would have ceased to be a peculiar and separate caste, and sunk down into the common penury, rudeness, and ignorance. Their influence would be closely connected with their wealth and dignity, which, of course, on the other hand, would tend to augment their influence; but that corporate ambition which induced them to consider the cause of their order as their own; that desire of riches. which wore the honourable appearance of personal disinterestedness, and zeal for the splendour of religon, could not have existed but in a class completely insulated from the common feelings and interests of the community. Individual members of the clergy might have become wealthy, and obtained authority over the ignorant herd, but there would have been no opulent and powerful Church, acting with vigorous unity, and arranged in simultaneous hostility against Barbarism and Paganism.

^{*} The general question of the celibacy of the clergy will be sub-sequently examined.

CHAP.

Our history must hereafter trace the connection of the independence and separate existence of the clergy with the maintenance and the authority of Christianity. But even as conservators of the lingering remains of science, arts, and letters, as the sole order to which some kind of intellectual education was necessary, when knowledge was a distinction which alone commanded respect, the clergy were, not without advantage, secured by their celibacy from the cares and toils of social life. In this respect, Monachism acted in two ways; as itself the most efficient guardian of what was most worth preserving in the older civilisation, and as preventing, partly by emulation, partly by this enforcement of celibacy, the secular clergy from degenerating universally into that state of total ignorance which prevailed among them in some quarters.

It is impossible to survey Monachism in its general influence, from the earliest period of its interworking into Christianity, without being astonished and perplexed with its diametrically opposite effects. Here, it is the undoubted parent of the blindest ignorance and the most ferocious bigotry, sometimes of the most debasing licentiousness; there, the guardian of learning, the author of civilisation, the propagator of humble

BOOK and peaceful religion. To the dominant spirit of Monachism may be ascribed some part at least of the gross superstition and moral inefficiency of the church in the Byzantine empire; to the same spirit much of the salutary authority of Western Christianity, its constant aggressions on barbarism, and its connection with the Latin literature. Yet neither will the different genius of the East and West account for this contradictory operation of the monastic spirit in the two divisions of the Roman empire. If human nature was degraded by the filth and fanatic self-torture, the callous apathy, and the occasional sanguinary violence, of the Egyptian or Syrian monk, yet the monastic retreat sent forth its Basils and Chrysostoms, who seemed to have braced their strong intellects by the air of the desert. Their intrepid and disinterested devotion to their great cause, the complete concentration of their whole faculties on the advancement of Christianity, seemed strengthened by this entire detachment from mankind.

Nothing can be conceived more apparently opposed to the designs of the God of nature, and to the mild and beneficent spirit of Christianity; nothing more hostile to the dignity, the interests, the happiness, and the intellectual and moral perfection of man, than the monk afflicting himself with unnecessary pain, and thrilling his soul with causeless fears; confined to a dull routine of religious duties, jealously watching, and proscribing every emotion of pleasure as a sin against the benevolent Deity; dreading wledge as an impious departure from the bening humility of man.

In the other hand, what generous or lofty mind refuse to acknowledge the grandeur of that eriority to all the cares and passions of mortality; felicity of that state which is removed far above fears or the necessities of life; that sole passion admiration and love of the Deity, which no ibt was attained by some of the purer and more iginative enthusiasts of the cell or the cloister. io still more will dare to depreciate that heroism Phristian benevolence, which underwent this selfial of the lawful enjoyments and domestic chariof which it had neither extinguished the desire, subdued the regret, not from the slavish fear of pleasing the Deity, or the selfish ambition of peral perfection; but from the genuine desire of ancing the temporal and eternal improvement of akind; of imparting the moral amelioration and itual hopes of Christianity to the wretched and barbarous; of being the messengers of Christian h, and the ministers of Christian charity, to the athen, whether in creed or in character.

We return from this long, but not unnecessary Life of ression, to the life of Jerome, the great advocate Jerome. Monachism in the West. Jerome began and sed his career as a monk of Palestine: he sined, he aspired to, no dignity in the church. ough ordained a presbyter against his will, he aped the episcopal dignity which was forced on his distinguished contemporaries. He left to Ambrose, to Chrysostom, and to Augustine, the authority of office, and was content with the lower, but not less extensive, influence of personal communication, or the effect of his writings. After having passed his youth in literary studies in Rome, and travelling throughout the West, he visited Palestine. During his voyage to the East, he surveyed some great cities, and consulted their libraries; he was received in Cyprus by the Bishop Epiphanius. In Syria, he plunged at once into the severest austerities of asceticism. We have already inserted the lively description of the inward struggles and agonies which tried him during his first retreat in the Arabian desert.

BOOK

Trials of Jerome in his retreat.

But Jerome had other trials peculiar to himself. It was not so much the indulgence of the coarser passions, the lusts and ambition of the world, which distressed his religious sensibilities*, it was the nobler and more intellectual part of his being which was endangered by the fond reminiscences of his former days. He began to question the lawfulness of those literary studies which had been the delight of his youth. He had brought with him, his sole companions, besides the sacred books of his religion, the great masters of poetry and philosophy, of Greek and Latin style; and the magic of Plato's and Cicero's language, to his refined and fastidious ear, made the sacred writings of Christianity, on which he was intently fixed, appear rude and barbarous. In his retreat in Beth- CHAP lehem he had undertaken the study of Hebrew*, as a severe occupation to withdraw him from those His clasimpure and worldly thoughts which his austerities studies. had not entirely subdued; and in the weary hours when he was disgusted with his difficult task, he could not refrain from recurring, as a solace, to his favourite authors. But even this indulgence alarmed his jealous conscience; though he fasted before he opened his Cicero, his mind dwelt with too intense delight on the language of the orator; and the distaste with which he passed from the musical periods of Plato to the verses of the Prophets, of which his ear had not yet perceived the harmony, and his Roman taste had not perhaps imbibed the full sublimity, appeared to him as an impious offence against his religion.† The inward struggles of his mind threw him into a fever, he was thought to be dead, and in the lethargic dream of his distempered imagination, he thought that he beheld himself before the throne of the great Judge, before the brightness of which he dared not lift up his eves. "Who art thou?" demanded the awful voice. - "A Christian," answered the trembling Jerome.

^{*} Jerome says,—"Prima est virginitas à nativitate; secunda virginitas à secundâ nativitate;" he xxv. iv. p. 242.; Oper. iv. p. 459.

· His description of Hebrew, as compared with Latin, is curious : -" Ad quam edomandam, cuidem fratri, qui ex Hebræis crediderat, me in disciplinam dedi ut post Quintiliani acumina, gravitatemque Prontonis, et levitatem Plinii, alphabetum discerem et stridentia anhelaque verba meditarer—quid ibi laboris insumserim?" Epist. xcv. ad Rusticum, p. 774.

+ Si quando in memet reversus, Prophetas legere cœpissem, sermo horrebat incultus. Epist. xviii. ad Eustoch. iv. p. 42.

† Interim parantur exequiæ, et vitalis animæ calor, toto frigescente jam corpore, in solo tantum tepente pulvisculo, palpitabat; quum sub-itò raptus in spiritu, ad tribunal judicis pertrahor; ubi tantum lu-minis, et tantum erat ex circum-

"'Tis false," sternly replied the voice, "thou art no Christian, thou art a Ciceronian. Where the treasure is, there is the heart also." Yet, however the scrupulous conscience of Jerome might tremble at this profane admixture of sacred and heathen studies, he was probably qualified in a high degree by this very discordant collision of opposite tastes for one of the great services which he was to render to Christianity. No writer, without that complete mastery over the Latin language, which could only be attained by constant familiarity with its best models, could so have harmonised its genius with the foreign elements which were to be mingled with it, as to produce the vivid and glowing style of the Vulgate Bible. That this is far removed from the purity of Tully, no one will question: we shall hereafter consider more at length its genius and its influence; but we may conjecture what would have been the harsh, jarring, and inharmonious discord of the opposing elements, if the translator had only been conversant with the African Latinity of Tertullian, or the elaborate obscurity of writers like Ammianus Marcellinus.

Return to Rome. Jerome could not, in the depths of his retreat, or in the absorbing occupation of his studies, escape being involved in those controversies which distracted the Eastern churches, and penetrated to the cell of the remotest anchorite. He returned stantium claritate fulgoris, ut projectus in terram, sursum aspicere non auderem. Interrogatus de conditione, Christianum me esse respondi. Et ille qui præsidebat mortuis ait, Ciceronianus es, non Christianus; ubi enim thesaurus tuus, ibi et cor tuum. Ad Eustoch, Epist, xviii. iv. p. 42.

to the West to avoid the restless polemics of his brother monks. On his return to Rome, the fame of his piety and talents commended him to the confidence of the Pope Damasus*, by whom he was employed in the most important affairs of the Roman But either the influence or the opinions of Morality of the Roman Jerome, excited the jealousy of the Roman clergy, clergy. whose vices Jerome paints in no softened colours. We almost, in this contest, behold a kind of prophetic prelude to the perpetual strife, which has existed in almost all ages, between the secular and regular clergy, the hierarchical and monastic spirit. Though the monastic opinions and practices were by no means unprecedented in Italy (they had been first introduced by Athanasius in his flight from Egypt); though they were maintained by Ambrose, and practised by some recluses; yet the pomp, the wealth, and the authority of the Roman ecclesiastics, which is described by the concurrent testimony of the Heathen historian † and the Christian Jerome, would not humbly brook the greater popularity of these severer doctrines, nor patiently submit to the estrangement of some of their more opulent and distinguished proselytes, particularly among the females. Jerome admits, indeed, with specious. but doubtful humility, the inferiority of the unordained monk to the ordained priest. The clergy were the succesors of the Apostles; their lips could make the body of Christ; they had the keys of heaven, until the day of judgment; they were the shepherds, the monks only part of the flock. Yet the clergy, no doubt, had the sagacity to foresee the dangerous rival, as to influence and authority, which was rising up in Christian society. great object of contention now was the command over the high-born and wealthy females of Rome. Jerome, in his advice to the clergy, cautiously warns them against the danger of female intimacy. however, either considered himself secure, or under some peculiar privilege, or justified by the prospect of greater utility, to suspend his laws on his own behalf. He became a kind of confessor, he directed the sacred studies, he overlooked the religious conduct, of more than one of these pious ladies. The ardour and vehemence with which his ascetic opinions were embraced, and the more than usually familiar intercourse with matrons and virgins of rank, may perhaps have offended the pride, if not the propriety, of Roman manners. The more temperate and rational of the clergy, in their turn, may have thought the zeal with which these female converts of Jerome were prepared to follow their teacher to the Holy Land, by no means a safe precedent; they may have taken alarm at the yet unusual fervour of language with which female ascetics were celebrated as united, by the nuptial tie, to Christ[†], and exhorted, in the glowing imais a singular union of religious earnestness and what, to modern that Eustochium was the first noble

Epist. xii. p. 744. Tillemont, Vie de Jerome. † Ammianus Marcellinus. See Postea.

Influence over females of Rome.

* Epist, ad Heliodorum, p. 10.

† See the Epistle ad Eustochium. The whole of this letter is a feeling, would seem strange indelicacy if not immodesty, with still stranger liberty with the language of Scripture. He seems to say gery of the Song of Solomon, to devote themselves CHAP. to their spiritual spouse. They were the brides of Christ; — Christ, worshipped by angels in heaven, ought to have angels to worship him on earth.* With regard to Jerome and his high-born friends, their suspicions were, doubtless, unjust.

It is singular, indeed, to contrast the different Character descriptions of the female aristocracy of Rome, at females. the various periods of her history; the secluded and dignified matron, employed in household duties, and educating with severe discipline, for the military and civil service of the state, her future consuls and dictators; the gorgeous luxury, the almost incredible profligacy, of the later days of the republic and of the empire, the Julias and Messalinas, so darkly coloured by the satirists of the times; the active charity and the stern austerities of the Paulas and Eustochiums of the present period. It was not, in general, the severe and lofty Roman matron of the age of Roman virtue whom Christianity induced to abandon her domestic duties, and that highest of all duties to her country, the bringing up of noble and virtuous citizens; it was the Roman maiden who embraced virginity:—" Quæ * * prima Romanæ urbis virgo nobilis esse cæpisti." He says, however, of Marcella,-" Nulla eo tempore nobilium fœminarum noverat Romæ propositum monacharum, nec audebat propter rei novitatem, ignominiosum, ut tunc putabatur, et vile in populis, nomen assumere." Marcellæ Epitaph. p. 780.

^{*} In Jerome's larger interpretation of Solomon's Song (adv. Jovin. p. 171.) is a very curious and whimsical passage, alluding to the Saviour as the spouse. There is one sentence, however, in the letter to Eustochium, so blasphemously indecent that it must not be quoted even in Latin. p. 38.

BOOK

soft, and at the same time, the savage female, who united the incongruous, but too frequently reconciled, vices of sensuality and cruelty; the female, whom the facility of divorce, if she abstained from less lawful indulgence, enabled to gratify in a more decent manner her inconstant passions; who had been inured from her most tender age, not merely to theatrical shows of questionable modesty, but to the bloody scenes of the arena, giving the signal perhaps with her own delicate hand for the mortal blow to the exhausted gladiator. We behold with wonder, not unmixed with admiration, women of the same race and city either forswearing from their earliest youth all intercourse with men, or preserving the state of widowhood with irreproachable dignity; devoting their wealth to the foundation of hospitals, and their time to religious duties and active benevolence. These monastic sentiments were carried to that excess which seemed inseparable from the Roman character. At twelve years old, the young Asella devoted herself to God; from that time she had never conversed with a man; her knees were as hard as a camel's, by constant genuflexion and prayer.* Paula, the fervent disciple of Jerome, after devoting the wealth of an ancient and opulent house to charitable uses t, to the Paula.

quos nunquam viderat, evagantem. Quis inopum moriens, non illius vestimentis obvolutus est? Quis clinicorum non ejus facultatibus sustentatus est? Quos curiosissimè totà urbe perquirens, damnum putabat, si quis debilis et esuriens cibo animum, et bonitatem etiam in eos sustentaretur alterius. Spoliabet

[#] Hieronym. Epist. xxi. + Jerome thus describes the charity of Paula: - Quid ego referam, amplæ et nobilis domus, et quondam opulentissimæ, omnes pæne divitias in pauperes erogatas. Quid in cunctos clementissimum apoverishing of her own children, deserted her mily. Her infant son and her marriageable daughr watched, with entreating looks, her departure; ie did not even turn her head away to hide her aternal tears, but lifted up her unmoistened eyes heaven, and continued her pilgrimage to the loly Land. Jerome celebrates this sacrifice of the oliest charities of life as the height of female eligious heroism.*

The vehement and haughty temper of Jerome was Controverot softened by his monastic austerities, nor humbled sies of Jerome. y the severe proscription of the gentler affections. It life, in the capital and the desert, was one long varfare. After the death of his friend and protector. Damasus, the growing hostility of the clergy, notithstanding the attachment of his disciples, ren-lios, et inter objurgantes proinquos, majorem se eis hærediitem, Christi misericordiam dimitre loquebatur. Epitaph. Paulæ, . 671. At her death, Jerome reites, with great pride, that she did ot leave a penny to her daughter, ut a load of debts (magnum æs lienum).

* It is a passage of considerable eauty: — Descendit ad portum, atre, cognatis, affinibus, et (quod is majus est) liberis prosequenbus, et clementissimam matrem ietate vincere cupientibus.

carbasa tendebantur, et remorum ductu navis in altum protrahebatur. Parvus Toxotius supplices manus tendebat in littora. Rufina, jam nubilis, ut suas expectaret nuptias, tacens fletibus obsecrabat, et tamen illa siccos ad cœlum oculos, pietatem in filios, pietate in Deum superans nesciebat se matrem ut Christi probaret ancillam. * Hoc contra jura naturæ plena fides patiebatur, imo gaudens animus appetebat. Epitaph. Paulæ 672.

This was her epitaph :-

Aspicis angustum precisâ rupe sepulcrum? Hospitium Paulæ est, cœlestia regna tenentis. Fratrem, cognatos, Romam, patriamque relinquens, Divitias, sobolem, Bethlehemite conditur antro. Hic præsepe tuum, Christe, atque hic mystica Magi Munera portantes, hominique, Deoque dedere.

Retreat to Palestine.

dered his residence in Rome disagreeable. was the peace of the monastic life his reward for his zealous exertions in its cause. He retired to Palestine, where he passed the rest of his days in religious studies, and in polemic disputes. Wherever any dissentient from the doctrine or the practice of the dominant Christianity ventured to express his opinions, Jerome launched the thunders of his interdict from his cell at Bethlehem. No one was more perpetually involved in controversy, or opposed with greater rancour of personal hostility, than this earnest advocate of unworldly religious seclusion. He was engaged in a vehement dispute with St. Augustine, on the difference between St. Peter and St. Paul. But his repose was most embittered by the acrimonious and obstinate contest with Rufinus, which was rather a personal than a polemic In one controversy, Christendom acknowledged and hailed him as her champion. Jovinian and Vigilantius are involved in the dark list of heretics; but their error appears to have been that of unwisely attempting to stem the current of popular Christian opinion, rather than any departure from the important doctrines of Christianity. They were premature Protestants; they endeavoured, with vain and ill-timed efforts, to arrest the encroaching spirit of Monachism, which had now enslaved the whole of Christianity*; they questioned the superior merit of celibacy; they protested against the growing worship of relics.† Their effect upon the minant sentiment of the times may be estimated CHAP. the language of wrath, bitterness, contempt, and horrence, with which Jerome assails these bold en, who thus presumed to encounter the spirit of eir age. The four points of Jovinian's heresy. ere, —1st, that virgins had no higher merit, unless perior in their good works, than widows and married omen; 2d, that there was no distinction of meats; l, that those who had been baptized in full faith, ould not be overcome by the Devil; and 4th, that ose who had preserved the grace of baptism ould meet with an equal reward in heaven. This st clause was perhaps a corollary from the first, as e panegyrists of virginity uniformly claimed a gher place in heaven for the immaculate than r those who had been polluted by marriage. ose doctrines Vigilantius added, if possible, more ited tenets. He condemned the respect paid to e martyrs and their relics; he questioned the iracles performed at their tombs; he condemned e lighting lamps before them as a Pagan superstion: he rejected the intercession of the saints; he amed the custom of sending alms to Jerusalem, id the selling all property to give it to the poor; npt of Vigilantius to return to simpler Christianity of former ys:—"On ne voit pas que l'hé-ie (de Vigilance), ait eu de te; ni qu'on ait eu besoin ucun concile pour la condamner it elle étoit contraire a la traion de l'Eglise Universelle." nı. y. p. 278.

Jovinian and Vigilantius

^{*} Hieronym. adv. Vigilantium, p. 281. † The observation of Fleury shows how mistimed was the at-

I have purposely, lest I should overstrain the Protestantism of these remarkable men, taken this view of their tenets from Fleury, perhaps the fairest and most dispassionate Tom. iv. writer of his church. p. 602.; tom. v. p. 275.

he asserted that it was better to keep it and distribute its revenues in charity; he protested against the whole monastic life, as interfering with the duty of a Christian to his neighbour. These doctrines were not without their followers; the resentment of Jerome was embittered by their effect on some of the noble ladies of Rome, who began to fall off to marriage. Even some bishops embraced the doctrines of Vigilantius, and asserting that the high professions of continence led the way to debauchery, refused to ordain unmarried deacons.

The tone of Jerome's indignant writings against those new heretics is that of a man suddenly arrested in his triumphant career by some utterly unexpected opposition; his resentment at being thus crossed is mingled with a kind of wonder that men should exist who could entertain such strange and daring tenets. The length, it might be said the prolixity, to which he draws out his answer to Jovinian, seems rather the outpouring of his wrath and his learning, than as if he considered it necessary to refute such obvious errors. Throughout it is the master condescending to teach, not the adversary to argue. He fairly overwhelms him with a mass of scripture, and of classical learning: at one time he pours out a flood of allegorical interpretations of the scripture; he then confounds him with a clever passage from Theophrastus on the miseries of marriage. Even the friends of Jerome, the zealous Pammachius himself. were offended by the fierceness of his first invective inst Jovinian*, and his contemptuous disparagent of marriage. The injustice of his personal arges are refuted by the more temperate stateents of Augustine and by his own admissions.† was obliged, in his apology, to mitigate his vehence, and reluctantly to fall into a milder strain; t even the Apology has something of the severe I contemptuous tone of an orator who is speakon the popular side, with his audience already his favour.

But his language to Jovinian is sober, dispas- viginate, and argumentative, in comparison with it to Vigilantius. He describes all the monsters er invented by poetic imagination, the centaurs, e leviathan, the Nemean lion, Cacus, Gervon. iul, by her one monster, Vigilantius[‡], had sur-

Indignamini mihi, quod Jovinum non docuerim, sed vicerim. indignantur mihi qui illum thematizatum dolent. Apolog.

Jerome admits that Jovinian not assert the privilege which indicated; he remained a monk, ugh Jerome highly colours his urious habits. After his coarse ic and bare feet, and food of ad and water, he has betaken self to white garments, sweet-d wine, and highly dressed ats: to the sauces of an Apicius Paxamus, to baths, and shamings (fricticulæ, -the Benedics translate this fritter shops), and ks' shops, it is manifest that he fers earth to heaven, vice to vir-, his belly to Christ, and thinks rubicund colour (purpuram cos ejus) the kingdom of heaven.

Yet this handsome, this corpulent, smooth monk, always goes in white like a bridegroom: let him marry a wife to prove the equal value of virginity and marriage; but if he will not take a wife, though he is against us in his words, his actions are for us. He afterwards says,-Ille Romanæ ecclesiæ auctoritate damnatus inter fluviales aves, et carnes suillas, non tam emisit animam quam eructavit. p. 183.

† His brief sketch of the enormities of Vigilantius is as follows: – Qui immundo spiritu pugnat contra Christi spiritum, et martyrum negat sepulcra esse veneranda; damnandas dicit esse vi-gilias; nunquam nisi in Pascha Alleluia cantandum: continentiam hæresim, pudicitiam libidinis seminarium.

passed all the pernicious and portentous horrors of other regions. "Why do I fly to the desert? - That I may not see or hear thee; that I may no longer be moved by thy madness, nor be provoked to war by thee; lest the eye of a harlot should captivate me, and a beautiful form seduce me to unlawful love." But his great and conclusive argument in favour of reverence for the dust of martyrs (that little dust which, covered with a precious veil, Vigilantius presumed to think but dust) is "Was the Emperor Constanuniversal authority. tine sacrilegious, who transported the relics of Andrew, Luke, and Timothy to Constantinople, at whose presence the devils (such devils as inhabit the wretched Vigilantius) roar, and are confounded? or the Emperor Arcadius, who translated the bones of the holy Samuel to Thrace? the bishops sacrilegious who enshrined these precious remains in silk, as a vessel of gold; and all the people who met them, and received them as it were the living prophet? Is the Bishop of Rome, who offers sacrifice on the altar under which are the venerable bones (the vile dust, would Vigilantius say?) of Peter and Paul; and not the bishop of one city alone, but the bishops of all the cities in the world who reverence these relics, around which the souls of the martyrs are constantly hovering to hear the prayers of the supplicant?"

The great work of Jerome, the authoritative Latin version of the scriptures, will demand our attention, as one of the primary elements of Christian literature, a subject which must form one most CHAP. important branch of our inquiry into the extent and nature of the general revolution in the history of mankind, brought about by the complete establishment of Christianity.

STORY OF CHRISTIANITY.

BOOK IV.

CHAP.

CHAPTER I.

THE ROMAN EMPIRE UNDER CHRISTIANITY.

THE period is now arrived when we may survey General the total change in the habits and manners, as well of the as in the sentiments and opinions, of mankind, effected by the dominance of the new faith. Christ-Christitianity is now the mistress of the Roman world; on every side the struggles of Paganism become more feeble; it seems resigned to its fate, or rather only hopes, by a feigned allegiance, and a simulation of the forms and language of Christianity, to be permitted to drag on a precarious and inglorious ex-The Christians are now no longer a separate people, founding and maintaining their small independent republics, fenced in by marked peculiarities of habits and manners from the rest of society; they have become to all outward appearance the people; the general manners of the world may be contemplated as the manners of Christendom. The monks, and in some respects the clergy, have, as it were, taken the place of the Christians as a separate and distinct body of men; the latter in a great degree, the former altogether, differing from the prevalent usages in their modes of life, and abstaining from the common pursuits and avocations of society. The Christian writers, therez 3 day.

BOOK IV.

Sources of informs-

Theodo-

fore, become our leading, almost our only, authorities for the general habits and manners of mankind (for the notice of such matters in the Heathen writers are few and casual), except the Theodosian code. This indeed is of great value as a record of manners, as well as a history of legislation; for that which demands the prohibition of the law, or is in any way of sufficient importance to require the notice of the legislature, may be considered as a prevalent custom: particularly as the Theodosian code is not a system of abstract and general law, but the register of the successive edicts of the Emperors, who were continually supplying, by their arbitrary acts, the deficiencies of the existing statutes, or as new cases arose, adapting those statutes to temporary exigences.

Christian writers.

But the Christian preachers are the great painters of Roman manners; Chrysostom of the East, more particularly of Constantinople; Jerome, and though much less copiously, Ambrose and Augustine, of Roman Christendom. Considerable allowance must, of course, be made in all these statements for oratorical vehemence; much more for the ascetic habits of the writers, particularly of Chrysostom, who maintained, and would have exacted, the rigid austerity of the desert in the midst of a luxurious capital. Nor must the general morality of the times be estimated from their writings without considerable discretion. It is the office of the preacher, though with a different design, yet with something of the manner of the satirist, to select the vices of mankind for his animadversion, and to dwell with far less force on the silent and unpretending There might be, and probably was, an under-current of quiet Christian piety and gentleness, and domestic happiness, which would not arrest the notice of the preacher, who was denouncing the common pride and luxury; or if kindling into accents of praise, enlarging on the austere self-denial of the anchorite, or the more shining virtues of the saint.

Christianity disturbed not the actual relations of society, it interfered in no way with the existing gradations of rank; though, as we shall see, it introduced a new order of functionaries, — what may be considered from the estimation in which they were held, a new aristocracy, - it left all the old official dignitaries in possession of their distinctions. With the great vital distinction between the freeman slavery. and the slave, as yet it made no difference.* broke down none of the barriers which separated this race of men from the common rights of human kind; and in no degree legally brought up this Pariah caste of antiquity to the common level of the human race.

In the new relation established between mankind and the Supreme Being, the slave was fully participant; he shared in the redemption through Christ, he might receive all the spiritual blessings, and enjoy all the immortalising hopes of the believer; he might be dismissed from his death-bed to heaven by the absolving voice of the priest; and besides this

* The laws of Justinian, it must be remembered, are beyond this period.

100K inestimable consolation in misery and degradation, this religious equality, at least with the religious part of the community, could not fail to elevate his condition, and to strengthen that claim to the sympathies of mankind which were enforced by Christian humanity. The axiom of Clement of Alexandria that by the common law of Christian charity, we were to act to them as we would be acted by, because they were men*, though perhaps it might have been uttered with equal strength of language by some of the better philosophers, spoke with far more general acceptance to the human heart. The manumission, which was permitted by Constantine to take place in the Church, must likewise have tended indirectly to connect freedom with Christianity.†

> Still, down to the time of Justinian, the inexorable law, which, as to their treatment, had already been wisely tempered by the Heathen Emperors, as to their rights, pronounced the same harsh and imperious sentence. It beheld them as an inferior class of human beings; their life was placed but partially under the protection of the law. If they died under a punishment of extraordinary cruelty, the master was guilty of homicide; if under more moderate application of the scourge, or any other infliction, the master was not accountable for their death.‡ While it refused to protect, the law inflicted on the slave punishments disproportionate to those of the freeman. If he accused his master for any crime, except high treason, he was to be CHAP. burned *; if free women married slaves, they sank to the abject state of their husbands, and forfeited their rights as free women; if a free woman intrigued with a slave, she was capitally punished, the slave was burned.‡

^{*} Clemens Alex. Pædagog. iii. † See Blair on Slavery, p. 288. ‡ Cod. Theodos. ix. 12. 1.

The possession of slaves was in no degree limited by law. It was condemned as a mark of inordinate luxury, but by no means as in itself contrary to Christian justice or equity.§

On the pomp and magnificence of the court, Manners of Christianity either did not aspire, or despaired of the court. enforcing moderation or respect for the common dignity of mankind. The manners of the East, as the Emperor took up his residence in Constantinople, were too strong for the religion. With the first Christian Emperor commenced that Oriental ceremonial, which it might almost seem, that, rebuked by the old liberties of Rome, the imperial despot would not assume till he had founded another capital; or at least, if the first groundwork of this Eastern pomp was laid by Dioclesian, Rome had already been deserted, and was not insulted by the open degradation of the first men in the empire to the language, attitudes, and titles of servitude.

The eunuchs, who, however admitted in solitary Governinstances to the confidence or favour of the earlier the eu-

^{*} Cod. Theodos. ix. 6. 2. † Ibid. iv. 5. † Ibid. ix. 11. 1. Ibid. iv. 9. 1. 2. 3. Clemens. Alex. Pædagog. iii. 12. It is curious to compare this passage of Clement with the beautiful essay of Seneca. See likewise Chrysostom almost passim. Some had 2000 or 3000. t. vii. p. 633.

c the majesty of the sovereign, he was pre-1 by a vast multitude of attendants, dukes, tris, civil and military officers, their horses glitwith golden ornaments, with shields of gold, ith precious stones, and golden lances. They aimed the coming of the Emperor, and com-Bed the ignoble crowd to clear the streets behim.* The Emperor stood or reclined on a eous chariot surrounded by his immediate atlants distinguished by shields with golden bosses round with golden eyes, and drawn by white es with gilded trappings; the chariot was set 1 precious stones, and golden fans vibrated with movement, and cooled the air. The multitude templated at a distance the snow-white cushions, silken carpets with dragons enwoven upon them ich colours. Those who were fortunate enough atch a glimpse of the Emperor beheld his ears led with golden rings, his arms with golden ins, his diadem set with gems of all hues, his ple robes, which with the diadem, were reserved the Emperor, in all their sutures embroidered h precious stones. The wondering people, on ir return to their homes, could talk of nothing the splendour of the spectacle, the robes, the les, the carpets, the size and splendour of the els. On his return to the palace, the Emperor ked on gold; ships were employed with the ex-of Inscriptions; and Muller, sostom.

Montfaucon, in an essay in last volume of the works of sostom, and in the twelfth of the Memoirs of the Aca- this picture, chiefly from ChryBOOK IV. press purpose of bringing gold dust* from remote provinces, which was strewn by the officious care of a host of attendants, so that the Emperor rarely set his foot on the bare pavement.

The aristocracy.

The official aristocracy, which had succeeded to the hereditary patriciate of Rome, reflected in more moderate splendour, and less unapproachable seclusion, the manners of the court. The chief civil offices were filled by men of ignoble birth, often eunuchs, who, by the prodigal display of their illacquired wealth, insulted the people, who admired, envied, and hated their arrogant state. The military officers, in the splendour of their trappings and accoutrements, vied with the gorgeousness of the court favourites; and even the barbarians, who began to force their way by their valour to these posts, in the capital, caught the infection of luxury and pomp. As in all despotisms, especially in the East, there was a rapid rise and fall of unworthy favourites, whose vices, exactions, and oppressions. were unsparingly laid open by hostile writers, directly they had lost the protecting favour of the Men then found out that the enormous wealth, the splendour, the voluptuousness, in which an Eutropius or a Rufinus had indulged, had been obtained by the sale of appointments, by vast bribes from provincial governors, by confiscations, and every abuse of inordinate power.†

* Χρύσιτιν. See Muller, p. 10.
† Hic Asiam villå pactus regit; ille redemit
Conjugis ornatu Syriam; dolet ille paternà
Bithynos mutasse domo. Suffixa patenti Vestibulo pretiis distinguit regula gentes.
Claud. in Eutrop. i. 199.

Christianity had not the power to elevate de- CHAP. spotism into a wise and beneficent rule, nor to dignify its inseparable consequence, court favouritism; yet after all, feeble and contemptible as are many of the Christian Emperors, pusillanimous even in their vices; odious as was the tyranny of their ministers; they may bear no unfavourable comparison with the Heathen Emperors of Rome. Human nature is not so outraged; our belief in the possible depravity of man is not so severely tried, as by the monstrous vices and cruelties of a Tiberius, a Caligula, or a Nero. Theodora, even, if we credit the malignant satire of Procopius, maintained some decency upon the throne. The superstitions of the Emperors debased Christianity; the Christian bishop was degraded by being obliged at times to owe his promotion to an eunuch or a favourite; yet even the most servile and intriguing of the hierarchy could not be entirely forgetful of their high mission; there was still a kind of moral repugnance, inseparable from the character they bore, which kept them above the general debasement.

The aristocratical life, at this period, seems to Manners of have been characterised by gorgeous magnificence the aristocracy. without grandeur, inordinate luxury without refinement, the pomp and prodigality of a high state

Fallit, et ambitos à principe vendit honores.

Congestæ cumulantur opes, orbisque rapinas Accipit una domus. Populi servire coacti Plenaque privato succumbunt oppida regno. In Rufin. i. 179—193. OK V.

)

of civilisation with none of its ennobling or humanising effects. The walls of the palaces were lined with marbles of all colours, crowded with statues of inferior workmanship, mosaics, of which the merit consisted in the arrangement of the stones; the cost, rather than the beauty or elegance, was the test of excellence, and the object of admiration. They were surrounded with hosts of parasites or servants. "You reckon up," Chrysostom thus addresses a patrician, "so many acres of land, ten or twenty palaces, as many baths, a thousand or two thousand slaves, chariots plated with silver or overlaid with gold."*

les.

Their banquets were merely sumptuous, without social grace or elegance. The dress of the females, the fondness for false hair, sometimes wrought up to an enormous height, and especially affecting the golden dye, and for paint, from which irresistible propensities they were not to be estranged even by religion, excite the stern animadversion of the ascetic Christian teacher. "What business have rouge and paint on a Christian cheek? Who can weep for her sins when her tears wash her face bare and mark furrows on her skin? With what trust can faces be lifted up towards heaven, which the Maker cannot recognise as his workmanship?"† Their necks, heads, arms, and fingers, were loaded with golden chains and rings; their persons breathed precious odours, their dresses were of gold stuff and silk; and in this attire they ventured to enter the church. Some of the wealthier Christian matrons gave a religious air to their vanity, while the more profane wore their thin silken dresses embroidered with hunting-pieces, wild beasts, or any other fanciful device; the more pious had the miracles of Christ, the marriage in Cana of Galilee, or the paralytic carrying his bed. In vain the preachers urged that it would be better to emulate these acts of charity and love, than to wear them on their garments.*

^{*} T. vii. p. 533.

⁺ Hieronym. Epist. 54. Compare Epist. 19. vol. i. p. 284.

It might indeed be supposed that Christianity, by the extinction of that feeling for the beauty, grandeur, and harmony of outward form, which was a part of the religion of Greece, and was enforced by her purer and loftier philosophy, may have contributed to this total depravation of the taste. Those who had lost the finer feeling for the pure and noble in art and in social life, would throw themselves into the gorgeous, the sumptuous, and the extravagant. But it was rather the Roman character than the influence of Christianity which was thus fatal to the refinements of life. degeneracy of taste was almost complete before the predominance of the new religion. The manners of ancient Rome had descended from the earlier empiret, and the manners of Constantinople were in most respects an elaborate imitation of those of Rome.

CHAP. I.

[•] Muller, p. 112. There are several statutes prohibiting the use of gold brocade or dresses of silk in the Theodosian Code. x. tit. 20. Other statutes regulate the dress in Rome, xiv. 10. 1.

[†] Compare the description of the manners and habits of the Roman nobles in Ammianus Marcellinus, so well transferred into English in the 31st chapter of Gibbon, vol. v. p. 258—268.

1V.

The provincial cities, according to the national character, imitated the old and new Rome; and in all, no doubt the nobility, or the higher order, were of the same character and habits.

On the appointment to the provincial governments, and the high civil offices of the empire, Christianity at this time exercised by no means a commanding, certainly no exclusive, influence. Either superior merit, or court intrigue, or favour, bestowed civil offices with impartial hand on Christian and Pagan. The Rufinus or the Eutropius cared little whether the bribe was offered by a worshipper in the church or in the temple. Heathen Themistius was appointed prefect of Constantinople by the intolerant Theodosius; Prætextatus and Symmachus held the highest civil functions in Rome. The prefect who was so obstinate an enemy to Chrysostom was Optatus, a Pagan. At a later period, as we have observed, a statue was raised to the Heathen poet Merobaudes.

But, besides the officers of the imperial government, of the provinces and the municipalities, there now appeared a new order of functionaries, with recognised, if undefined powers, the religious magistrates of the religious community. In this magisterial character, the new hierarchy differed from the ancient priesthoods, at least of Greece and Rome. In Greece, they were merely the officiating dignitaries in the religious ceremonial; in Rome, the pontifical was attached to, and in effect merged in, the important civil function. But Christianity had its own distinct and separate aris- CHAP. tocracy, which not merely officiated in the church, but ruled the public mind, and mingled itself with the various affairs of life, far beyond this narrow sphere of religious ministration.

The Christian hierarchy was completely organised and established in the minds of men before the great revolutions which, under Constantine. legalised Christianity, and, under Theodosius and his successors, identified the Church and State. The strength of the sacerdotal power was consolidated before it came into inevitable collision, or had to dispute its indefinable limits with the civil authority. Mankind was now submitted to a double dominion, the civil supremacy of the Emperor and his subordinate magistrates, and that of the Bishop with his inferior priesthood.

Up to the establishment of Christianity, the cle- Gradual rical order had been the sole magistracy of the developement of new communities. But it is not alone from the the hierarchical scantiness of authentic documents concerning the power. earliest Christian history, but from the inevitable nature of things, that the development of the hierarchical power, as has already been partially shown*, was gradual and untraceable. infant Christian community, we have seen that the chief teacher and the ruler, almost immediately, if not immediately, became the same person. was not so much that he was formally invested in religious power of the hierarchy grew up side by CHAP. side, or intertwined with each other, by the same spontaneous vital energy. Every thing in the primary formation of the communities tended to increase the power of their ecclesiastical superiors. The investiture of the blended teacher and ruler in a sacred, and at length in a sacerdotal character, the rigid separation of this sacred order from the mass of the believers. could not but arise out of the unavoidable developement of the religion. It was not their pride or ambition that withdrew them, but the reverence of the people which enshrined them in a separate sphere: they did not usurp or even assume their power and authority; it was heaped upon them by the undoubting and prodigal confidence of the community. The hopes and fears of men would have forced this honour upon them, had they been humbly reluctant to accept it. Man, in his state of religious excitement, imperiously required some authorised interpreters of those mysterious revelations from heaven which he could read himself but imperfectly and obscurely; he felt the pressing necessity of a spiritual guide. The ectly and obscured of a spiritual guid lation. It has been observed that the decurion was prohibited from taking orders in order to obtain exemption from the duties of his station. Cod. Theod. xii. 1. 49. No slave, curialis, officer of the court, public debtor, procurator, or collector of the purple dye (murilegulus), or one involved in business, might be ordained, or, if ordained, might be reclaimed to his former state. Cod. Theod. ix. 45, 3. This was a law of the close of the fourth century, A. D. 398. The Council of Illiberis had made a restriction that no freedman, whose patron was a Gentile, could be ordained; he was still too much under control. Can. lxxx.

* Book ii. ch. 4.

VOL. III.

BOOK IV. privileges and distinctions of the clergy, so far from being aggressions on his religious independence, were solemn responsibilities undertaken for the general benefit. The Christian commonalty, according to the general sentiment, could not have existed without them, nor could such necessary but grave functions be entrusted to casual or common No individual felt himself safe, except hands. under their superintendence. Their sole right of entering the sanctuary arose as much out of the awe of the people as their own self-invested holiness of character. The trembling veneration for the mysteries of the sacrament must by no means be considered as an artifice to exalt themselves as the sole guardians and depositaries of these blessings; it was the genuine expression of their own profoundest feelings. If they had not assumed the keys of heaven and hell; if they had not appeared legitimately to possess the power of pronouncing the eternal destiny of man, to suspend or excommunicate from those Christian privileges which were inseparably connected in Christian belief with the eternal sentence, or to absolve and readmit into the pale of the Church and of salvation,—among the mass of believers, the uncertainty, the terror, the agony of minds fully impressed with the conviction of their immortality, and yearning by every means to obtain the assurance of pardon and peace, with heaven and hell constantly before their eyes, and agitating their inmost being, would have been almost insupportable. However they might exaggerate their powers, they could not extend them CHAP. beyond the ready acquiescence of the people. They could not possess the power of absolving without that of condemning; and men were content to brave the terrors of the gloomier award, for the indescribable consolations and confidence in their brighter and more ennobling promises.

The change in the relative position of Christianity to the rest of the world tended to the advancement of the hierarchy. At first there was no necessity to guard the admission into the society with rigid or suspicious jealousy, since the profession of Christianity in the face of a hostile world was in itself almost a sufficient test of sincerity. Expulsion from the society, or a temporary exclusion from its privileges, which afterwards grew into the awful forms of interdict or excommunication. must have been extremely rare or unnecessary *, since he who could not endure the discipline, or who doubted again the doctrines of Christianity, had nothing to do but to abandon a despised sect and revert to the freedom of the world. The older and more numerous the community, severer regulations were requisite for the admission of members, the maintenance of order, of unity in doctrine, to the Corinthians (1 Cor. v. 5.), which seems to have been the first of forcible expulsion, was obviously an act of Apostolic authority. This, it is probable, was a Jewish convert; and these persons stood in a peculiar position; they would be his old religion, with all its advanashamed, or would not be permittages.

* The case in St. Paul's Epistle ted, to return into the bosom of the Jewish community, which they had abandoned, and, if expelled from the Christian Church, would be complete outcasts. Not so the Heathen apostate, who might one day leave, and the next return, to

All legal disputes had, from the first, been submitted CHAP. to the religious magistracy, not as interpreters of the laws of the empire, but as best acquainted with the Increase in higher principles of natural justice and Christian their civil equity. The religious heads of the communities were the supreme and universally recognised arbiters in all the transactions of life. When the magistrate became likewise a Christian, and the two communities were blended into one, considerable difficulty could not but arise, as we shall hereafter see, in the limits of their respective jurisdictions.

But the magisterial or ruling part of the ecclesiastical function became thus more and more relatively important; government gradually became an affair of asserted superiority on one hand, of exacted submission on the other; but still the general voice would long be in favour of the constituted authorities. The episcopal power would be a mild, a constitutional, an unoppresssive, and therefore unquestioned and unlimited sovereignty; for, in truth, in the earlier period, what was the bishop, and in a subordinate degree, the presbyter, or even the deacon?—He was the religious superior, elected by general acclamation, or at least, by general consent, as commanding that station by his unrivalled religious qualifications; he was solemnly invested in his office by a religious ceremony; he was the supreme arbiter in such civil matters as occurred among the members of the body, and thus the conservator of peace; he was the censor of morals, the minister in holy rites,

Gnosticism, which the bishops of Asia Minor and of Syria had to combat, was not a Christian sect or heresy, but another religion, although speaking in some degree Christian language. The justifiable alarm of these dangerous encroachments would induce the teachers and governors to assume a loftier and more dictatorial tone; those untainted by the new opinions would vindicate and applaud their acknowledged champions and defenders. Hence we account for the strong language in the Epistles of Ignatius, which appears to claim the extraordinary rank of actual representatives, not merely of the Apostles, but of Christ himself, for the bishops, precisely in this character, as maintainers of the true Christian doctrine.* In the

* My own impression is decidedly in favour of the genuineness of these Epistles,—the shorter ones I mean — which are vindicated by Pearson; nor do I suspect that these passages, which are too frequent, and too much in the style and spirit of the whole, are later interpolations. Certainly the fact of the existence of two different copies of these Epistles throws doubt on the genuineness of both; but I receive them partly from an historical argument, which I have suggested, vol. ii. p.151., partly from internal evidence. Some of their expressions, e.g., "Be ye subject to the bishop as to Jesus Christ" (ad Trall. c. 2.); "Follow your bishop as Jesus Christ the Father, the presbytery as the Apostles; reverence the deacons as the ordinance of God" (ad Smyrn. c. 8.); taken as detached sentences, and without regard to the figurative style and ardent manner of the writer, would seem so extraordinary a transition from the tone of the Apostles, as to throw still further doubts on the authenticity at least of these sentences. But it may be observed that in these strong expressions the object of the writer does not seem to be to raise the sacerdotal power, but rather to enforce Christian unity, with direct reference to these fatal differences of doctrine. In another passage he says, "Be ye subject to the bishop and to each other $(r_{\psi} \ell \pi \iota \sigma \kappa \acute{\sigma} \ell \psi \kappa a \dot{\sigma} \lambda \lambda \acute{\eta} \lambda o \iota \zeta)$, as Jesus Christ to the Father, and the Apostles to Christ, to the Father and to the Spirit."

I cannot indeed understand the inference that all the language or tenets of Christians who may have heard the Apostles are to be considered of Apostolic authority. Ignatius was a vehement and strongly figurative writer, very different in his tone, accorpseudo-Apostolic Constitutions, which belong probably to the latter end of the third century, this more than Apostolic authority is sternly and unhesitatingly asserted. • Thus, the separation between the clergy and laity continually widened; the teacher or ruler of the community became the dictator of doctrine, the successor, not of the bishop appointed by Apostolic authority t, or according to Apostolic usage, but the Apostle; and at length took on himself a sacerdotal name and dignity. A strong corporate spirit, which arises out of associations formed for the noblest as well as for the most unworthy objects, could not but actuate the hierarchical college which was formed in each diocese or each city by the bishop and more or less numerous presbyters and deacons. The control on the autocracy of the bishop, which was exercised by this senate of presbyters, without whom he rarely acted, tended to strengthen, rather ding to my judgment, to the Apostolic writings. His eager desire for martyrdom, his deprecating the interference of the Roman Christians in his behalf, is remarkably at variance with the sober dignity with which the Apostles did not seek, but submitted to death. That which may have been high-wrought metaphor in Ignatius, is repeated by the author of the Apostolic Constitutions, without reserve or limitation. This, I think, may be fairly taken as indicative of the language prevalent at the end of the third or beginning of the fourth century, - buil o ἐπίσκοπος εἶς Θεὸν τετιμήσθω. The tione successerunt.

BOOK

bishop is to be honoured as God. ii. 30. The language of Psalm lxxxi. "Ye are Gods," is applied to them : — they are as much greater than the king as the soul is superior to the body, - στέργειν όφειλέτε ώς πατίρα, — φοδείσθαι ώς βασιλεα.

* Ούτος ύμιν ἐπίγειος Θεός μετά Θεοῦ. Lib. ii. c. 26.

† The full Apostolic authority was claimed for the bishops, I think, first distinctly, at a later period. See the letter from Firmilianus in Cyprian's works, Epist. lxxv. Potestas peccatorum remittendorum Apostolis data est * * et episcopis qui eis vicarià ordinathan to invalidate, the authority of the general CHAP. body, in which all particular and adverse interests were absorbed in that of the clerical order. *

The language of the Old Testament, which was Language received perhaps with greater readiness, from the Testament. contemptuous aversion in which it was held by the Gnostics, on this as on other subjects, gradually found its way into the Church. † But the strong Clergy and and marked line between the ministerial or magisterial order (the clergy) and the inferior Christians, the people (the laity), had been drawn before the bishop became a pontiff (for the Heathen names were likewise used), the presbyters, the sacerdotal order, and the deacons, a class of men who shared in the indelible sanctity of the new priesthood. The common priesthood of all Christians, as distinguishing them by their innocent and dedicated character from the profane Heathen, asserted in. the Epistle of St. Peter, was the only notion of the sacerdotal character at first admitted into the popular sentiment. ‡ The appellation of the sacerdotal order began to be metaphorically applied

† It is universally adopted in the Apostolic Constitutions. The crime of Korah is significantly adduced; tithes are mentioned, I believe, for the first time, ii. 25. Compare vi. 2.

† See the well known passage of Tertullian : - Nonne et laici sacerdotes sumus? * * Differentiam inter ordinem et plebem constituit ecclesiæ auctoritas. Tertullian evidently Montanises in this treatise, de Exhort. Castit. c. 7., yet seems to deliver these as maxims generally acknowledged.

^{*} Even Cyprian enforces his own authority by that of his con-current College of Presbyters:— Quando à primordio episcopatûs mei statuerem, nihil sine consilio vestro, et cum consensu plebis, meâ privatim sententia gerere. Epist. v. In other passages he says, Cui rei non potui me solum judicem dare. He had acted, therefore, cum collegis meis, et cum plebe ipså universa. Epist. xxviii.

BOOK IV. to the Christian clergy. but soon became real titles; and by the close of the third century, they were invested in the names and claimed the rights of the Levitical priesthood in the Jewish theocracy. The Epistle of Cyprian to Cornelius, Bishop of Rome, shows the height to which the episcopal power had aspired before the religion of Christ had become that of the Roman empire. The passages of the Old Testament, and even of the New, in which honour or deference are paid to the Hebrew pontificate, are recited in profuse detail; implicit obedience is demanded for the priest of God, who is the sole infallible judge or delegate of Christ. ‡

Even if it had been possible that, in their state of high-wrought attachment and reverence for the teachers and guardians of their religion, any mistrust could have arisen in the more sagacious and far-sighted minds of the vast system of sacerdotal domination, of which they were thus laying the deep foundations in the Roman world, there was no recollection or tradition of any priestly tyranny from which they could take warning or imbibe

• We find the first appearance of this in the figurative Ignatius. Tertullian uses the term summi Sacerdotes.

† The passage in the Epistle of Clemens (ad Roman. c. 40.), in which the analogy of the ministerial offices of the Church with the priestly functions of the Jewish temple is distinctly developed, is rejected as an interpolation by all judicious and impartial scholars.

‡ See his 68th Epistle, in which he draws the analogy between the legitimate bishop and the sacerdos of the law, the irregularly elected and Corah, Dathan, and Abiram: — Neque enim aliunde hæreses obortæ sunt, aut nata sunt schismata, quam inde quod sacerdoti Dei non obtemperatur, nec unus in ecclesià ad tempus sacerdos, et ad tempus Judex, rice Christi cogitatus: cui si secundum magisteria divina obtemperaret fraternitas universa, nemo adversum sacerdotium collegium quicquam moverat. Ad Cornel, Epist. lv.

caution. These sacerdotal castes were obsolete or Oriental; the only one within their sphere of knowledge was that of the Magians in the hostile kingdom of Persia. In Greece, the priesthood had sunk into the neglected ministers of the deserted temples; their highest dignity was to preside over the amusements of the people. The Emperor had now at length disdainfully cast off the supreme pontificate of the Heathen world, which had long been a title, and nothing more. Even among the Jews, the rabbinical hierarchy, which had gained considerable strength, even during our Saviour's time, but after the fall of the temple, and the publication of the Talmuds, had assumed a complete despotism over the Jewish mind, was not a priesthood; the rabbins came promiscuously from all the tribes; their claims rested on learning and on knowledge of the traditions of the Fathers, not on Levitical descent.

Nor indeed could any danger be apparent, so long as the free voice of the community, guided by fervent piety, and rarely perverted by less worthy motives, summoned the wisest and the holiest to these important functions. The nomination to the sacred office experienced the same, more gradual, perhaps, but not less inevitable, change from the popular to the self-electing form. The acclamation of the united, and seldom, if ever, discordant voices of the presbyters and the people might be trusted with the appointment to the headship of a poor and devout community, whose utmost desire was to worship God, and to

CHAP. I. IV.

Change in the mode of election.

BOOK

fulfil their Christian duties in uninterrupted obscurity. But as the episcopate became an object of ambition or interest, the disturbing forces which operate on the justice and wisdom of popular elections could not but be called forth; and slowly the clergy, by example, by influence, by recommendation, by dictation, by usurpation, identified their acknowledged right of consecration for a particular office with that of appointment to it. was one of their last triumphs. In the days of Cyprian, and towards the close of the third century. the people had the right of electing, or at least of rejecting, candidates for the priesthood.* In the latter half of the fourth century, the streets of Rome ran with blood in the contest of Damasus and Ursicinus, for the bishopric of Rome; both factions arrayed against each other the priests and the people who were their respective partisans.† Thus the clergy had become a distinct and recognised class in society, consecrated by a solemn ceremony, the imposition of hands, which, however, does not yet seem to have been indelible. But

* Plebs ipsa maximè habeat potestatem vel eligendi dignos sacerdotes, vel indignos recusandi. Epist. lxvii. Cornelius was testimonio cleri, ac suffragio populi electus. Compare Apostol. Constit. viii. 4. The Council of Laodicea (at the beginning of the fourth century) ordains that bishops are to be appointed by the metropolitans, and that the multitude, of δχλοι, are not to designate persons for the priesthood.

† Ammianus Marcell. xxvii. 3. Hierom. in Chron. Compare Gibbon, vol. iv. 259. ‡ A canon of the Council of Chalcedon (can. 7.) prohibits the return of a spiritual person to the laity, and his assumption of lay offices in the state. See also Conc. Turon. i. c. 5. The laws of Justinian confiscate to the Church the property of any priest who has forsaken his orders. Cod. Just. i. tit. iii. 53.; Nov. v. 4. 125. c. 15. This seems to imply that the practice was not uncommon even at that late period. Compare Planck, vol. i. 399.

each church was still a separate and independent community; the bishop as its sovereign, the presbyters, and sometimes the deacons, as a kind of religious senate, conducted all its internal concerns. Great deference was paid from the first to the bishops of the more important sees: the number and wealth of the congregations would give them weight and dignity; and in general those prelates would be men of the highest character and attainments; yet promotion to a wealthier or more distinguished see was looked upon as betraying worldly ambition. The enemies of Eusebius, the Arian, or semi-Arian, bishop of Constantinople, bitterly taunted him with his elevation from the less important see of Nicomedia to the episcopate of the Eastern metropolis. This translation was prohibited by some councils.*

The level of ecclesiastical or episcopal dignity Metrogradually broke up; some bishops emerged into a bishops, higher rank; the single community over which the bishop originally presided grew into the aggregation of several communities, and formed a diocese; the metropolitan rose above the ordinary bishop, the patriarch assumed a rank above the metropolitan, till at length, in the regularly graduated scale, the primacy of Rome was asserted, and submitted to by the humble and obsequious West.

The diocese grew up in two ways, - 1. In the Formation larger cities, the rapid increase of the Christians of the dioled necessarily to the formation of separate congregations, which, to a certain extent, required each its proper organisation, yet invariably remained subordinate to the single bishop. In Rome, towards the beginning of the fourth century, there were above forty churches, rendering allegiance to the prelate of the metropolis.

^{*} Synod. Nic. can. 15.; Conc. Sard. c. 2.; Conc. Arel. 21.

BOOK

Chorepiscopi.

2. Christianity was first established in the towns and cities, and from each centre diffused itself with more or less success into the adjacent country. In some of these country congregations, bishops appear to have been established, yet these chorepiscopi, or rural bishops, maintained some subordination to the head of the mother church *: or where the converts were fewer, the rural Christians remained members of the mother church in the city.† In Africa, from the immense number of bishops, each community seems to have had its own superior; but this was peculiar to the province. In general, the churches adjacent to the towns or cities, either originally were, or became, the diocese of the city bishop; for as soon as Christianity became the religion of the state, the powers of the rural bishops were restricted, and the office at length was either abolished or fell into disuse.‡

The rank of the metropolitan bishop, who presided over a certain number of inferior bishops, and the convocation of ecclesiastical or episcopal ^{*} See in Bingham, Ant. b. ii. c. 14., the controversy about the chorepiscopi or rural bishops.

country converts: παντῶν κατά πόλεις η άγρους μενόντων, έπὶ τὸ αὐτὸ συνέλευσις γίνεται. i. 67.

[‡] Concil. Antioch. can. 10.; + Justin Martyr speaks of the Concil. Ancyr. c. 13.; Conc. Laod.

ods, grew up apparently at the same time and CHAP. m the same causes. The earliest authentic iods seem to have arisen out of the disputes about : time of observing Easter*; but before the ddle of the third century, these occasional and raordinary meetings of the clergy in certain disets took the form of provincial synods. These gan in the Grecian provincest, but extended oughout the Christian world. In some cases y seem to have been assemblies of bishops alone, others of the whole clergy. They met once twice in the year; they were summoned by the tropolitan bishop, who presided in the meeting, 1 derived from, or confirmed his metropolitan mity, by this presidency.‡

As the metropolitans rose above the bishops, so Arch-bishops and archbishops or patriarchs rose above the metro-These ecclesiastical dignities seem to ve been formed according to the civil divisions the empire. § The patriarchs of Antioch, Jerusan, Alexandria, Rome, and by a formal decree the Council of Chalcedon, Constantinople, asned even a higher dignity. They asserted the

See the list of earlier synods fly on this subject, Labbe, icilia, vol. i. p. 595. 650., edit. is, 1671.

See the remarkable passage in tullian, de Jejunio, with the inious commentary of Mosheim, Reb. Christ. ante Const. M.

264. 268. : Necessariò apud nos fit, ut singulos annos seniores et præiti in unum conveniamus, ad disponenda ea, quæ curæ nostræ commissa sunt. Firm. ad Cyprian. Ep. 75.

§ Bingham names thirteen or fourteen patriarchs. Alexandria, Antioch, Cæsarea, Jerusalem, Antioch, Cæsarea, Jerusalem, Ephesus, Constantinople, Thessalonica, Sirmium, Rome, Carthage, Milan, Lyons, Toledo, York. But their respective claims do not appear to have been equally recognised, or at the same period.

BOOK 1V. right, in some cases, of appointing, in others of deposing, even metropolitan bishops.

While Antioch, Alexandria, and Constantinople contested the supremacy of the East, the two former as more ancient and Apostolic churches, the latter as the imperial city, Rome stood alone, as in every respect the most eminent church in the West. While other churches might boast their foundation by a single apostle (and those churches were always held in peculiar respect), Rome asserted that she had been founded by, and preserved the ashes of two, and those the most distinguished of the Apostolic body. Before the end of the third century, the lineal descent of her bishops from St. Peter was unhesitatingly claimed, and obsequiously admitted by the Christian world.† name of Rome was still imposing and majestic, particularly in the West; the wealth of the Roman bishop probably far surpassed that of other prelates. for Rome was still the place of general concourse and resort; and the pious strangers who visited the capital would not withhold their oblations to the metropolitan church. Within the city, he presided over above forty churches, besides the sub-Rome.

* Chrysostom deposed Gerontius, metropolitan of Nicomedia. Sozomen, viä. 6.

† The passage of Irenæus (lib. ii. c. 3.), as is well known, is the first distinct assertion of any primacy in Peter, and derived from him to the see of Rome. This passage would be better authority if it existed in the original language, not in an indifferent translation; if it were the language of an Eastern, not a Western, prelate, who might acknowledge a supremacy in Rome, which would not have been admitted by the older Asiatic sees; still more, if it did not assert what is manifestly untrue, the foundation of the Church of Rome by St. Peter and St. Paul (see vol. ii. p. 44.); and, finally, if Irenaus could be conclusive authority on such a subject. Planck justly observes, that the potior principalitas of the city of Rome was the primary reason why a potior principalitas was recognised in the see of Rome.

urbicarian districts. The whole clerical establish- CHAP. ment at Rome amounted to forty-six presbyters, seven deacons, seven sub-deacons, forty-two acolyths, fifty-two exorcists, readers, and doorkeepers. It comprehended fifteen hundred widows and poor brethren, with a countless multitude of the higher orders and of the people. No wonder that the name, the importance, the wealth, the accredited Apostolic foundation of Rome, arrayed her in preeminent dignity. Still, in his correspondence with the Bishop of Rome, the general tone of Cyprian, the great advocate of Christian unity, is that of an equal; though he shows great respect to the Church of Rome, it is to the faithful guardian of an uninterrupted tradition, not as invested with superior authority.*

As the hierarchical pyramid tended to a point, its base spread out into greater width. The greater pomp of the services, the more intricate administration of affairs, the greater variety of regulations required by the increasing and now strictly separated classes of votaries, imposed the necessity for new functionaries, besides the bishops, priests, and deacons. These were the archdeacon and the five promise, I would avoid all con-troversy on this as well as on other Epist, lxxi. Hoc erant utique subjects. It is but right, therefore, for me to give the two apparently conflicting passages in Cyprian on the primacy of St. Peter : - Nam nec Petrus quem primum Dominus elegit, et super quem ædificavit Ecclesiam suam * * vindicavit sibi aliquid insolenter aut arroganter

* While I deliver my own assumpsit, ut dicerct se primatum conclusions, without fear or compromise, I would avoid all conet posteris sibi potius oportere." cæteri Apostoli, quod fuit Petrus, pari consortio præditi et honoris et potestatis; sed exordium ab unitate proficiscitur, et primatus Petro datur, ut una Christi ecclesia, et cathedra una monstretur. Unit. Eccles.

ence between its remote members, in those recommendatory letters with which the Christian who travelled was furnished to his brethren in Unity of other parts of the empire; above all, in the common literature, which, including the sacred writings, seems to have spread with more or less regularity through the various communities. Nothing however tended so much, although they might appear to exacerbate and perpetuate diversities of opinion, to the maintenance of this unity, as the assemblage and recognition of general Councils as the repre- General sentatives of universal Christendom.* The bold

* The earliest councils (not œcumenic) were those of Rome (1st and 2d) and the seven held at Carsthized and the seven held at Cat-thage, concerning the lapsi, the schism of Novatianus, and the re-baptizing of heretics. The seventh in Routh, Reliquiæ Sacræ (Labbe, Concilia III.), is the first of which we have any thing like a report; and from this time, either from the canons which they issue, or the opinions delivered by the bishops, the councils prove important authorities, not merely for the decrees of the Church, but for the dominant tone of sentiment, and even of manners. Abhorrence of heresy is the prevailing feeling in this council, which decided the validity of heretical baptism. "Christ," says one bishop, "founded the Church, the Devil heresy. How can the synagogue of Satan administer the baptism of the Church?" Another subjoins, "He who yields or betrays the baptism of the Church to heretics, what is he but a Judas of the spouse of Christ." The Synod or Council of Antioch (A. D. 269) condemned Paul of Samosata. The Council of Illiberis (Elvira, or Granada), A. D. 303, affords some curious notices of the state of Christianity in that remote province. Some of the Heathen flamines appear to have attempted to reconcile the performances of some of their religious duties, at least their presiding at the games, with Christianity. There are many moral regulations which do not give a high idea of Spanish virtue. bishops and clergy were not to be itinerant traders; they might trade within the province (can. xviii.), but were on no account to take upon usury. The Jews were probably settled in great numbers in Spain: the taking food with them is interdicted, as also to permit them to reap the harvest. Gambling is forbidden. The councils of Rome and of Arles were held to settle the Donatist controversy; but of the latter there are twenty-two canons chiefly of ecclesiastical regulations. The Council of Ancyra principally relates to the conduct of persons during the time of persecution. The Council of Laodicea has some curious general canons. The first œcumenic council was i di arch sectred now to assume Los her existence. Its vital principle ger than ensert and hidden harmony definited the Constitute in all parts of the the first Navious and with each other. By essistence of the orthodox Emperoes, and the and a comment of the present offers dees, one the milest doctrine rush potagonal the as-1 Construent Domainstru Armanism. Mathe their throng aside and the the as it were translate see in this . Size of the other social impersurant The Propertor was the some rings of the is numbed the aristocrapy of the sumthe fire autocracy of the Point & and the latter of the Western Church so the mataority of the forms. , from exemplary, nersasive. a become authoritative, commaning, When Christianity became the second religion, when it became the reignoral , many, of the Emperor, of the State, in onver, or the hereditary Christian had no stong Pagan party to receive him back into its mount that of Nee. See book iii. c. iv. I was followed by the long succession of Arian, and anti-Arian connects, at Tyre, Antioch, Rome, Milan, Sardica, Rimini, &c. The Arian Conneil of Antioch is very betting the history and the residence of the bishops and the clergy and their residence for their labours to their own dioceses or cures (v.b. 344). Apud Labbe, vol.

30,000

ii. 559. The first of Consumtinople was the second germana council (1.0.381). It re-estantisms Trinitarianism as the operate of the least; it elevated the manusric of Constantinople into 1 purarchate, to rank after Rome. The two other of the occumena concils are beyond the bounds of the present history. en outcast from the Church. If he ceased to CHAP. ieve, he no longer dared cease to obey. No. irse remained but prostrate submission, or the lurance of any penitential duty which might be orced upon him; and on the penitential system, I the power of excommunication, to which we ll revert, rested the unshaken hierarchical aurity over the human soul.

With their power increased both those other Increase in rces of influence, pomp and wealth. Distinctions station and in authority naturally lead to disctions in manners, and those adventitious cirnstances of dress, carriage, and habits, which ignate different ranks. Confederating upon ial terms, the superior authorities in the church l state began to assume an equal rank. ristian city, the bishop became a personage of highest importance; and the clergy, as a kind subordinate religious magistracy, claimed, if a erent kind, yet an equal share of reverence, h the civil authority; where the civil magiste had his insignia of office, the natural respect the people, and the desire of maintaining his cial dignity, would invest the religious funcnary likewise with some peculiar symbol of character. With their increased rank and imation, the clergy could not but assume a re imposing demeanour; and that majesty in ich they were arrayed during the public cerenial could not be entirely thrown off when they arned to ordinary life. The reverence of man cts dignity from those who are its objects. The primitive Apostolic meanness of appearance and habit was altogether unsuited to their altered position, as equal in rank, more than equal in real influence and public veneration, to the civil officers of the empire or municipality. The consciousness of power will affect the best disciplined minds, and the unavoidable knowledge that salutary authority is maintained over a large mass of mankind by imposing manners, dress, and mode of living, would reconcile many to that which otherwise might appear incongruous to their sacred character. There was in fact, and always has been, among the more pious clergy, a perpetual conflict between a conscientious sense of the importance of external dignity and a desire, as conscientious, of retaining something of outward humility. The monkish and ascetic waged implacable war against that secular distinction which, if in some cases eagerly assumed by pride and ambition, was forced upon others by the deference, the admiration, the trembling subservience of mankind. The prelate who looked the most imperious, and spoke most sternly, on his throne, fasted and underwent the most humiliating privations in his chamber or his cell. Some prelates supposed, that as ambassadors of the Most High, as supreme governors in that which was of greater dignity than the secular empire, the earthly kingdom of Christ, they ought to array themselves in something of imposing dignity. The bishops of Rome early affected state and magnificence, Chrysostom, on the other hand, in Constantinople, differing from his predecessors, considered poverty of ress, humility of demeanour, and the most severe CHAP. isterity of life, as more becoming a Christian relate, who was to set the example of the virtues hich he inculcated, and to show contempt for nose worldly distinctions which properly belonged the civil power. Others, among whom was Amrose of Milan, while in their own persons and in rivate they were the plainest, simplest, and most ustere of men, nevertheless threw into the service f the Church all that was solemn and magnificent: nd as officiating functionaries, put on for the time he majesty of manner, the state of attendance, the plendour of attire, which seemed to be authorised y the gorgeousness of dress and ceremonial pomp 1 the Old Testament.*

BOOK IV.

With the greater reverence, indeed, peculiar anctity was exacted, and no doubt, in general, oberved by the clergy. They were imperatively reuired to surpass the general body of Christians in

* The clergy were long without ny distinction of dress, except on remonial occasions. At the end f the fourth century, it was the istom for them in some churches wear black. Socr. H. E. vi. 22. erome, however, recommends that iey should neither be distinaished by too bright or too sombre plours. Ad Nepot. The proper abits were probably introduced at ie end of the fifth century, as they e recognised by councils in the xth. Conc. Matisc. A. D. 581, in. 1. 5.; Trull. c. 27. The tonire began in the fourth century. rima del iv. secolo i semplici preti on avevano alcun abito distinto agli altri o Pagani o Cristiani, se on in quanto la professata loro umiltà faceva una certa pompa de abjezione e de povertà. Cicognara, Storia de Scultura, t. i. p. 27. Count Cicognara gives a curious account of the date and origin of the dif-ferent parts of the clerical dress. The mitre is of the eighth century, the tiara of the tenth.

The fourth Council of Carthage (A. D. 398) has some restrictions ou dress. The clericus was not to wear long hair or beard (nec comam habeat nec barbam. Can. xliv.); he was to approve his professon by his dress and walk, and not to study the beauty of his dress or sandals. He might obtain his sustenance by working as an artisan, or in agri-culture, provided he did not neg-lect his duty. Can. li. lii.

BOOK 1V. purity of morals, and, perhaps even more, in all religious performances. As the outward ceremonial, fasting, public prayer during almost every part of the day, and the rest of the ritual service, were more completely incorporated with Christianity, they were expected to maintain the public devotion by their example, and to encourage self-denial by their more rigid austerity.

Wealth of the clergy.

Wealth as well as pomp followed in the train of The desire to command wealth (we must not yet use the ignoble term covetousness) not merely stole imperceptibly into intimate connection with religion, but appeared almost a part of religion itself. The individual was content to be disinterested in his own person; the interest which he felt in the opulence of the Church, or even of his own order, appeared not merely excusable, but a sacred duty. In the hands of the Christian clergy, wealth, which appeared at that period to be lavished on the basest of mankind, and squandered on the most criminal and ignominious objects, might seem to be hallowed to the noblest pur-It enabled Christianity to vie with Paganism in erecting splendid edifices for the worship of God, to provide an imposing ceremonial, lamps for midnight service, silver or golden vessels for the altar, veils, hangings, and priestly dresses; it provided for the wants of the poor, whom misgovernment, war, and taxation, independent of the ordinary calamities of human life, were grinding to the To each church were attached numbers of widows and other destitute persons; the redemp-

Uses to which it was applied.

ion of slaves was an object on which the riches of CHAP. he Church were freely lavished: the sick in the ospitals and prisons, and destitute strangers were nder their especial care. "How many captives has he wealth of the Pagan establishment released rom bondage?" This is among the triumphant uestions of the advocates of Christianity.* naintenance of children exposed by their parents, nd taken up and educated by the Christians, was nother source of generous expenditure. When, hen, at first the munificence of the Emperor, and fterwards the gratitude and superstitious fears of he people, heaped up their costly offerings at the eet of the clergy, it would have appeared not nerely ingratitude and folly, but impiety and unharitableness to their brethren, to have rejected hem. The clergy, as soon as they were set apart rom the ordinary business of life, were maintained y the voluntary offerings of their brethren. iety which embraced Christianity never failed in iberality. The payments seem chiefly to have een made in kind, rather than in money, though n extraordinary occasions large sums were raised or some sacred or charitable object. One of the arliest acts of Constantine was to make munifient grants to the despoiled and destitute Church.† A certain portion of the public stores of corn and ther produce, which was received in kind by the officers of the revenue, was assigned to the Church nd clergy.‡ This was withdrawn by Julian, and Ambros. contra Symmachum. 1 Sozomen, H. E. v. 5. + Euseb. H. E. x. 6.

BOOK IV. when regranted by the Christian Emperors, ws diminished one third.

Law of Courtantime empowering the Church to receive bequests.

The law of Constantine which empowered the clergy of the Church to receive testamentary bequests, and to hold land, was a gift which would scarcely have been exceeded if he had granted them two provinces of the empire.* It became almost a sin to die without some bequest to pious uses; and before a century had elapsed, the mass of property which had passed over to the Church was so enormous, that the most pious of the Emperors were obliged to issue a restrictive law, which the most ardent of the Fathers were constrained to approve. Jerome acknowledges, with the bitterness of shame, the necessity of this check on ecclesiastical avarice.† "I complain not of the law, but that we have deserved such a law." The ascetic father and the Pagan historian describe the pomp and avarice of the Roman clergy in the fourth century. Ammianus, while he describes the sanguinary feud which took place for the prelacy between Damasus and Ursicinus, intimates that the magnificence of the prize may account for the obstinacy and ferocity with which it was contested. He dwells on Restrictive edict of Valentinian.

Pope Da-

⁴ This is the observation of Planck.

† Valentinian II. de Episc. Solis clericis et monachis hac lege prohibetur, et prohibetur non à persecutoribus sed à principibus Christianis; nec de lege conqueror, sed dolco cur meruerimus hanc legem. Hieronym. ad Nepot. He speaks also of the provida severaque legis cautio, et tamen non sic refrænatur avaritia. Ambrose (L. ii. adv. Symm.) admits the necessity of the law. Augustine, while he loftily disclaims all participation in such abuses, acknowledges their frequency. Quicunque vult, exharedato filio hæredem facere ecclesiam, quærat alterum qui suscipiat, non Augustinum, immo, Deo propitio, inveniat neminem. Serm. 49.

ne prodigal offerings of the Roman matrons to neir bishop; his pomp, when in elaborate and eleant attire he was borne in his chariot through the dmiring streets; the costly luxury of his almost nperial banquets. But the just historian contrasts nis pride and luxury of the Roman pontiff with ne more temperate life and dignified humility of he provincial bishops. Jerome goes on sternly to harge the whole Roman clergy with the old vice of ne Heathen aristocracy, hæredipety or legacy huntng, and asserts that they used the holy and venerable ame of the Church to extort for their own personal molument, the wealth of timid or expiring deotees. The law of Valentinian justly withheld om the clergy and the monks alone that privilege f receiving bequests which was permitted to the lowest of mankind, Heathen priests, actors, chaoteers and harlots."

Large parts of the ecclesiastical revenues, however, rose from more honourable sources. Some of the states of the Heathen temples, though in general onfiscated to the imperial treasury, were alienated a the Christian churches. The Church of Alexndria obtained the revenue of the Temple of erapis.*

These various estates and properties belonged

* Sozomen, v.7. The Church of niloch possessed lands, houses, nts, carriages, mules, and other nds of property. It undertook the uly sustenance of 3000 widows id virgins, besides prisoners, the ck in the hospitals, the maimed, and the diseased, who sat down, as it were before the Christian altar, and received food and raiment, besides many other accidental claims on their benevolence. Chrysostom, Oper. Montfaucon in his dissertation, gives the references.

CHAP. I. BOOK IV.

Application of the wealth of the Church.

to the Church in its corporate capacity, not to the clergy. They were charged with the maintenance of the fabric of the church, and the various charitable purposes, including the sustenance of their own dependent poor. Strong enactments were made to prevent their alienation from those hallowed purposes *, the clergy were even restrained from bequeathing by will what they had obtained from the property of the Church. The estates of the Church were liable to the ordinary taxes, the land and capitation tax, but exempt from what were called sordid and extraordinary charges, and from the quartering of troops.†

The bishops gradually obtained almost the exclusive management of this property. In some churches, a steward (œconomus) presided over this department, but he would, in general, be virtually under the control of the bishop. In most churches, the triple division began to be observed; one third of the revenue to the bishop, one to the clergy, the other to the fabric and the poor; the Church of Rome added a fourth, a separate portion for the fabric.

The clergy had become a separate community; they had their own laws of internal government, any monk, who died intestate, and without legal heirs, fell, not to the treasury, as in ordinary cases, but to the church or monastery to which he belonged. The same privilege was granted to the Corporation of Decurions. Codex Theodos. v. iii, 1.

^{*} Conc. Carth. iii. 40.; Antioch, 24. Constit. Apost. 40. Cod. Theodos. de Episc. et Clericis, t. 33.

[†] Planck, P. iii. c. vi. 3. † By a law of Theodosius and Valens, A. D. 434, the property of any bishop, presbyter, deacon, deaconess, sub-deacon, &c., or of ir own special regulations, or recognised proeties of life and conduct. Their social delinencies were not as yet withdrawn from the civil isdiction; but besides this, they were amenable to severe judgments of ecclesiastical censure *; e lowest were liable to corporeal chastisement. agellation, which was administered in the sygogue, and was so common in Roman society, s by no means so disgraceful as to exempt the rsons at least of the inferior clergy from its inflicn. But the more serious punishment was degradon into the vulgar class of worshippers. To them was the most fearful condemnation to be ejected om the inner sanctuary and thrust down from their evated station. †

As yet they were not entirely estranged from Celibacy of ciety, they had not become a caste by the gal enforcement or general practice of celi-Clement, of Alexandria asserts and vincates the marriage of some of the Apostles. ‡

Sozomen states that Constane gave his clergy the privilege of ecting the jurisdiction of the il tribunal, and bringing their uses to the bishop. P. M. i. 9. t these were probably disputes ween clergyman and clergyman. I others were cases of arbition, by mutual agreement; the civil power was to ratheir decree. In a Novella Valentinian, A.D. 75?, it is exessly said, - Quoniam constat scopos et presbyteros forum leus non habere * * nec de aliis isis præter religionem posse cogscere. Compare Planck, p. 300. e clericus was bound to appear, summoned by a layman, before e ordinary judge. Justinian made the change, and that only in a limited manner.

† The decrees of the fourth council of Carthage show the strict morals and humble subordination demanded of the clergy at the close of the fourth century.

Ι "Η καὶ τοὺς 'Αποστόλους ἀποδοκιμάζουσι ; Πέτρος μέν γάρ και Φίλιππος ἐπαιζοποιήσαντο. Φίλιππος ζὲ καὶ τὰς θυγατέρας ἀνδρώσιν ἐξέδωκεν, καὶ όγε Παῦλος οὐκ ὑκνεῖ ἐν τινι έπιστολη την αὐτῦν προσαγορεύειν σύζυγον, ήν οὐ περιεκόμιζεν διά τὸ τῆς ὑπηρεσίας εὐσταλές. — Strom. l. iii. c. 6. On the question of the marriage of the Apostles and their immediate followers, almost every thing is collected in a note of Cotelerius, Patres Apostolici, ii. 241.

BOOK IV.

The discreet remonstrance of the old Egyptian bishop perhaps prevented the Council of Nice from imposing that heavy burden on the reluctant clergy. The aged Paphnutius, himself unmarried, boldly asserted that the conjugal union was chastity. But that, which, in the third century is asserted to be free to all mankind, clergy as well as laity, in Egypt†, in the fourth, according to Jerome, was prohibited or limited by vows of continence. It has been asserted; and without refutation, that there was no ecclesiastical law or regulation which compelled the celibacy of the clergy for the first three centuries. Clement of Alexandria, as we see, argues against enforced celibacy from the example of the Apostles. Married bishops and presbyters frequently occur in the history of Eusebius. The martyrdom of Numidicus was shared and not dishonoured by the companionship of his wife. § It was a sight of joy and consolation to the husband to see her perishing in the same flames. The wives of the clergy are recognised, not merely in the older writings, but also in the public documents of the Church. Council after council, in the East, introduced regulations, which, though intended to ^{*} Gelasii. Histor. Conc. Nic. c. xxxii. Socrat. i. 11. Sozomen, i. 23. Baronius insists upon this being Greek fable.

⁺ Ν.α μήν και τον τής μίας γύναικος ανέσα πανέ άποδέχεται κήν πρεσεύτεως ή, κήν διάκονος, κήν λαικος, άνεπιλήπτως γάμφ χουμένος. Σώθησέται δέδιά τής τεκνογονίας. Strom. iii. 12. 9.

[†] By Bingham, book iv.

[♦] Numidicus presbyter uxorem adhærentem lateri suo, concrematam cum cæteris, vel conservatam potius dixerim, lætus aspexit. Cyprian, p. 525. See in Basnage, Dissertatio Septima, a list of married prelaes.

^{||} Conc. Gang. c. 4. Conc. Ancyr. c. 10. This law allows any deacon to marry.

strict, recognise the legality of these ties.* lighly as they exalt the angelic state of celibacy, either Basil in the East, nor Augustine in the West, ositively prohibits the marriage of the clergy.†

But in the fourth century, particularly in the latter alf, the concurrent influence of the higher honours tributed to virginity by all the great Christian riters; of the hierarchical spirit, which, even at nat time, saw how much of its corporate strength epended on this entire detachment from worldly es; of the monastic system, which worked into ne clerical, partly by the frequent selection of onks for ordination, and for consecration to ecesiastical dignities, partly by the emulation of ie clergy, who could not safely allow themselves be outdone in austerity by these rivals for popular itimation; all these various influences introduced rious restrictions and regulations on the marriage 'the clergy, which darkened at length into the somn ecclesiastical interdict. First, the general senment repudiated a second marriage as a monstrous t of incontinence, an infirmity or a sin which ight to prevent the Christian from ever aspiring any ecclesiastical office. The next offence

In the West, the Council of On Augustine, compare Theiner, vira commands the clergy to abp. 154. in from connubial intercourse 1 the procreation of children. n. xxxiii. This was frequently enacted. Among others, Conc. rthag. v. 2. Labbe, ii. 1216.
† Basil speaks of a presbyter who i contumaciously contracted an VOL. III.

[‡] Athenagoras laid down the general principle, ο γάρ δεύτερος (γάμος) εὐπρεπης έστι μοίχεια. De Resurr. Carn. Compare Orig. contr. Cels. vii., and Hom. vi., in Num. xviii., in Luc. xviii., in Matt. Tertull. ad Uxor. 1-5. This was almost an lawful marriage. Can. ii. c. 27. universal moral axiom. Epiphanius against the general feeling was marriage with a widow; then followed the restriction of marriage after entering into holy orders; the married priest retained his wife, but to condescend to such carnal ties after ordination, was revolting to the general sentiment, and was considered to imply a total want of feeling for the dignity of their high calling. Then was generally introduced a demand of abstinence from sexual connection from those who retained their wives: this was imperatively required from the higher orders of the clergy. It was considered to render unclean, and to disqualify even from prayer for the people, as the priest's life was to be a perpetual prayer.* Not that there was as yet any uniform practice. The bishops assembled at the Council of Gangra + condemned the followers of Eustathius, who refused to receive the sacraments from any but unmarried priests. The heresy of Jovinian, on the other hand, probably said, that since the coming of Christ no digamous clergyman had ever been ordained. Barbeyrac has col-lected the passages of the Fathers expressive of their abborrence of second marriages. Morale des Pères, p. 1. 29. 34. 37. &c. The Pères, p. 1. 29. 34. 37. &c. The Council of Neo-Cæsarea forbade clergymen to be present at a second marriage — πρεσδύτερον είς γάμους διγαμοῦντων μη ἐστιᾶσθαί. Can. vii.

 Such is the distinct language of Jerome. Si laicus et quicunque fidelis orare non potest nisi carent officio conjugali, sacerdoti, cui semper pro populo offerenda sunt sacrificia semper orandum est. Si semper orandum est, semper carendum matrimonio. Adv. Jovin. p. 175.

† The Council of Gangra, in the preamble and in the first canon do not appear to refer necessarily to the wives of the clergy. They anathematise certain teachers (the Eustathians) who had blamed marriage, and said that a faithful and pious woman who slept with her husband could not enter into the kingdom of heaven. A sacred virgin is prohibited from vaunting over a married woman, canon x. Women are forbidden to abandon their husbands and children.

alled forth the severe regulations of Pope Siricius.*
his sort of encyclical letter positively prohibited letter from any intercourse with their wives. A man who lived to the age of nirty, the husband of one wife, that wife, when narried, a virgin, might be an acolyth or subdeacon; fter five years of strict continence, he might be romoted to a priest; after ten years more of the ame severe ordeal, a bishop. A clerk, any one in oly orders, even of the lowest degree, who married widow, or a second wife, was instantly deprived: o woman was to live in the house of a clerk.

The Council of Carthage, reciting the canon f a former council, commands the clergy to abtain from all connection with their wives. The nactment is perpetually repeated, and in one exended to subdeacons.† The Council of Toledo rohibited the promotion of ecclesiastics who had nildren. The Council of Arles prohibited the rdination of a married priest‡, unless he made a romise of divorce from the married state. Jerome istinctly asserts that it was the universal regulation f the East, of Egypt, and of Rome § to ordain only aut continentes; aut si uxorcs habuerint, mariti esse desistunt. Adv. Vigilantium, p. 281. Jerome appeals to Jovinian himself:—"Certé confiteris non posse esse episcopum qui in episcopatu filios faciat, alioqui si deprehensus fuerit, non quasi vir tenebitur, sed quasi adulter damnabitur. Adv. Jovin. 175. Compare Epiphanius, Hæres. liv. 4.

* The letter of Siricius in Mansi oncil. iii. 635., A. D. 385.

CHAP.

[†] These councils of Carthage e dated A.D. 390, 418, and 419.
‡ Assumi aliquem ad sacerdotium n posse in vinculo sacerdotii nstitutum, nisi primum fuerit prossa conversio. A.D. 452.

[§] Quidfacient Orientis Ecclesiæ? id Ægypti, et sedis Apostolicæ, æ aut virgines clericos accipiunt

Married Insteps and clergy these who were unmarried, or who ceased to be husbands. But even in the fourth, and the beginning of the fifth centuries, the practice rebelled against this severe theory. Married clergymen, even married bishops, and with children, occur in the ecclesiastical annals. Athanasius, in his letter to Dracontius, admits and allows the full right of the bishop to marriage. • Gregory of Nazienzen was born after his father was bishop, and had a vounger brother named Cæsarius. + Gregory of Nyssa, and Hilary of Poictiers, were married. Less distinguished names frequently occur: those of Spyridon and Eustathius. Synesius, whose character enabled him to accept episcopacy on his own terms, positively repudiated these unnatural restrictions on the freedom and holiness of the conjugal state. "God and the law, and the holy hand of Theophilus bestowed on me my wife. I declare, therefore, solemnly, and call you to witness, that I will not be plucked from her, nor lie with her in secret, like an adulterer. But I hope and pray that we may have many and virtuous children." !!

The Council of Trulla only demanded this high test of spirituality, absolute celibacy, from bishops, and left the inferior clergy to their freedom. But the earlier Western Council of Toledo only admitted the deacon, and that under restrictions, to CHAP. connubial intercourse; the presbyter who had children after his ordination could not be a bishop.*

^{*} Athanasii Epistola ad Dracentium. † Gregory makes his father thus address him:—

Οίπω τοσούτεν έκμεμέτοηκας βιου 'Οσος δεήλθε θυσιών έμοι χούνος. De Vitá Suá, v. 512.

[†] Sozom, i. 11. Socrat, i. 12. || Synesii Epist, 105. || Socrat, ii. 43.

This overstrained demand on the virtue, not of in- Moral condividuals in a high state of enthusiasm, but of a whole class of men; this strife with nature, in that which, in its irregular and lawless indulgence, is the source of so many evils and of so much misery, in its more moderate and legal form is the parent of the purest affections, and the holiest charities; this isolation from those social ties which, if at times they might withdraw them from total dedication to their sacred duties, in general, would, by their tending to soften and humanise, be the best school for the gentle and affectionate discharge of those dutiesthe enforcement of the celibacy of the clergy, though not yet by law, by dominant opinion, was not slow in producing its inevitable evils. Simul- Mulieres taneously with the sterner condemnation of marriage, or at least the exaggerated praises of chastity, we hear the solemn denunciations of the law, the deepening remonstrances of the more influential writers, against those secret evasions by which the clergy endeavoured to obtain the fame without the practice of celibacy, to enjoy some of the pleasures and advantages without the crime of marriage. From the middle of the third century, in which the growing aversion to the marriage of the clergy begins to appear, we find the "sub-introduced" a certain sense independent of the government, with considerable inalienable endowments, and filled by men of a peculiar and sacred character, and recognised by the state. Their authority extended far beyond their jurisdiction; their influence far beyond their authority. The internal organisation was complete. The three great patriarchs in the East, throughout the West the Bishop of Rome, exercised a supreme and, in some points, an appellant jurisdiction. Great ecclesiastical causes could be removed to their tribunal. Under them, the metropolitans, and in the next rank the bishops, governed their dioceses, and ruled the subordinate clergy, who now began to form parishes, separate districts to which their labours were to be confined. In the superior clergy had gradually become vested, not the ordination only, but the appointment, of the inferior; they could not quit the diocese without letters from the bishop, or be received or exercise their functions in another without permission.

* Conc. Tolet. A. D. 400, can. i. c c 3

On the incorporation of the Church with the Union of State, the co-ordinate civil and religious magistracy Church and State. maintained each its separate powers. On one side, as far as the actual celebration of the ecclesiastical ceremonial, and in their own internal affairs in general; on the other, in the administration of the military, judicial, and fiscal affairs of the state, the bounds of their respective authority were clear and distinct. As a citizen and subject, the Christian, the priest, and the bishop, were amenable to the laws of the empire and to the imperial decrees, and liable to taxation, unless specially exempted, for the service of the state.* The Christian statesman, on the other hand, of the highest rank, was amenable to the ecclesiastical censures, and was bound to submit to the canons of the Church in matters of faith and discipline, and was entirely dependent on their judgment for his admission or rejection from the privileges and hopes of the Christian.

So far the theory was distinct and perfect; each had his separate and exclusive sphere; yet there could not but appear a debateable ground on which the two authorities came into collision, and neither could altogether refrain from invading the territory of his ally or antagonist.

Union of the Church and the State. The treaty between the contracting parties was, in fact, formed with such haste and precipitancy, that the rights of neither party could be defined or secured; eager for immediate union, and impatient of delay, they framed no deed of settlement, by which, when their mutual interests should be less identified, and jealousy and estrangement should arise, they might assert their respective rights, and enforce their several duties.

* The law of Constantius which appears to withdraw the bishops entirely from the civil jurisdiction, and to give the privilege of being tried upon all charges by a tribunal of bishops, is justly considered by Gothofred as a local or temporary act, probably connected with the feuds concerning Arianism. Cod.

Theod. xvi. 2. 12., with Gothofred's note. Valens admitted the ecclesiastical courts to settle religious difficulties and slight offences. xvi. 2. 23. The same is the scope of the more explicit law of Honorius. xvi. 2. 201. The immunity of the clergy from the civil courts was of very much later date.

CHAP.

In ecclesiastical affairs, strictly so called, the supremacy of the Christian magistracy, it has been said, was admitted. They were the legislators of discipline, order, and doctrine. The festivals, the fasts, the usages and canons of the Church, the government of the clergy, were in their exclusive power; the decrees of particular synods and councils possessed undisputed authority, as far as their sphere extended; general councils were held binding on the whole Church. But it was far more easy to define that which did belong to the province of the Church than that which did not. asserts its authority, and endeavours to extend its influence over the whole sphere of moral action, which is, in fact, over the whole of human life, its habits, manners, conduct. Christianity, as the most profound moral religion, exacted the most complete and universal obedience; and as the acknowledged teachers and guardians of Christianity, the clergy, continued to draw within their sphere every part of human life in which man is actuated by moral or religious motives, the moral authority, therefore, of the religion, and consequently of the clergy, might appear legitimately to extend over every transaction of life, from the legislature of the sovereign, which ought, in a Christian king, to be guided by Christian motives, to the domestic duties of the peasant, which ought to be fulfilled on the principle of Christian love.

But, on the other hand, the State was supreme over all its subjects, even over the clergy, in their BOOK 1V.

character of citizens. The whole tenure of property, to what use soever dedicated (except in such cases as itself might legalise on its first principles, and guarantee, when bestowed, as by gift or bequest), was under its absolute control; the immunities which it conferred, it might revoke; and it would assert the equal authority of the constitutional laws over every one who enjoyed the protection of those laws. Thus, though in extreme cases, these separate bounds of jurisdiction were clear, the tribunals of ecclesiastical and civil law could not but, in process of time, interfere with and obstruct each other.

But there was another prolific source of differ-The clergy, in one sense, from being the representative body, had begun to consider themselves the Church; but in another and more legitimate sense, the State, when Christian, as comprehending all the Christians of the empire, became the Church. Which was the legislative body,—the whole community of Christians or the Christian aristocracy, who were in one sense the admitted rulers? And who was to appoint these rulers? It is quite clear that, from the first, though the consecration to the religious office was in the bishop and clergy, the laity had a voice in the ratification, if not in the appointment. Did not the State fairly succeed to all the rights of the laity, more particularly when privileges and endowments, attached to the ecclesiastical offices, were conferred or guaranteed by the State, and therefore might appear in justice revocable, or liable to be regulated by the civil power?

This vital question at this time was still farther embarrassed by the rash eagerness with which the dominant Church called upon the State to rid it of its internal adversaries. When once the civil power was recognised as cognisant of ecclesiastical offences, where was that power to end? The Emperor, who commanded his subjects to be of one religion, might command them, by the same title, to adopt another. The despotic head of the State might assert his despotism as head of the Church. It must be acknowledged that no theory, which has satisfactorily harmonised the relations of these two, at once, in one sense separate, in another identical, communities, has satisfied the reasoning and dispassionate mind; while the separation of the two communities, the total dissociation, as it were, of the Christian and the citizen, is an experiment apparently not likely to advance or perpetuate the influence of Christianity.

At all events, the hasty and unsettled compact of this period left room for constant jealousy and As each was the stronger, it encroached upon, and extended its dominion into the territory of the other. In general, though with very various fortunes, in different parts of the world, and at different periods, the Church was in the ascendant, and for many centuries confronted the State, at least on equal terms.

The first aggression, as it were, which the Church brought extended to marriages with heretics, or members of CHAP. another Christian sect. When, therefore, the Church began to recognise five legal impediments to marriage, this was the Ist, — difference of religion tween Christians and infidels, Jews, or heretics. The IId was, the impediment of crime. Persons guilty of adultery were not allowed to marry according to the Roman law; this was recognised by the Church. A law of Constantius had made rape, or forcible abduction of a virgin, a capital offence; and, even with the consent of the injured female, marriage could not take place. pediments from relationship. Here also they were content to follow the Roman law, which was as severe and precise as the Mosaic Institutes.* IV. The civil impediment. Children adopted by the same father could not marry. A freeman could not marry a slave; the connection was only concubinage. It does not appear that the Church yet ventured to correct this vice of Roman society. V. Spiritual relationship, between godfathers and their spiritual children: this was afterwards carried much farther. To these regulations for the re-

Christiane, Gentili aut Judæo filiam tradere; cave, inquam, Gentilem aut Judæam atque alienigenam, hoc est, hæreticam, et omnem alienam à fide tuâ uxorem accersas tibi. Ambros. de Abraham. c. 9. Cum certissimè noveris tradi à nobis Christianam nisi Christiano non posse. Augustin. Ep. 234. ad Rusticum.

The council of Illiberis had prohibited Christians from giving their daughters in marriage to Gentiles (propter copiam puellarum), also to Jews, heretics, and especially to Heathen priests. Can. xv. xvì. xvii.

^{*} See the various laws in the Cod. Theod., lib. iii. tit. 12., De Incestis Nuptiis.

pression of improper connections, were added some other ecclesiastical impediments. There were holy periods in the year, in which it was forbidden to contract marriage. No one might marry while under ecclesiastical interdict; nor one who had made a vow of chastity.

Divorce.

The facility of divorce was the primary principle of corruption in Roman social life. Augustus had attempted to enforce some restrictions on this unlimited power of dissolving the matrimonial contract from caprice or the lightest motive. Probably, the severity of Christian morals had obtained that law of Constantine which was so much too rigid for the state of society, as to be entirely ineffective, from the impossibility of carrying it into execution. It was relaxed by Constantius, and almost abrogated by Honorius. The inveterate evil remained. A Christian writer, at the beginning of the fifth century, complains that men changed their wives as quickly as their clothes, and that marriage

* Codex Theodos, iii, 16, 1, See vol. ii, p. 473,

† By the law of Honorius,—

1. The woman who demanded a divorce without sufficient proof forfeited her dowry, was condemned to banishment, could not contract a second marriage, was without hope of restoration to civil rights. 2. If she made out only a tolerable case (convicted her husband only of mediocris culpa), she only forfeited her dowry, and could not contract a second marriage, but was liable to be prosecuted by her husband for adultery. 3. If she made a strong case (gravis causa), she retained her dowry, and might marry again after five years. The husband, in the first case, forfeited the gifts and dowry, and was condemned to perpetual celibacy, not having liberty to marry again after a certain number of years. In the second, he forfeited the dowry but not the donation, and could marry again after two years. In the third, he was bound to prosecute his guilty wife. On conviction, he received the dowry, and might marry again immediately. Cod. Theodos. iii. xvi. 2. chambers were set up as easily as booths in a CHAP. market.* At a later period than that to which our history extends, when Justinian attempted to prohibit all divorces except those on account of chastity, that is when the parties embraced the monastic life, he was obliged to relax the law on account of the fearful crimes, the plots and poisonings, and other evils, which it introduced into domestic life.

But though it could not correct or scarcely mitigate this evil by public law in the general body of society, Christianity, in its proper and more peculiar sphere, had invested marriage in a religious sanctity, which at least, to a limited extent, repressed this social evil. By degrees, separation from bed and board, even in the case of adultery, the only cause which could dissolve the tie, was substituted and enforced by the clergy, instead of legal divorce. Over all the ceremonial forms, and all expressions which related to marriage, the Church threw the utmost solemnity; it was said to resemble the mystic union of Christ and the Church; till at length marriage grew up into a sacrament, indissoluble until the final separation of death, except

* Mulieres à maritis tanquam vestes subinde mutari, et thalamos tam sæpe et facile strui quam nun-dinarum tabernas. Asterius Ama-senus apud Combefis. Auct. t. i.

The story has been often quoted from St. Jerome, of the man (of the lowest class) in Rome, who had had twenty wives (not divorced - had buried them all); his wife had had twenty-two husbands. There was a great anxiety to know which would outlive the other. The man carried the day, and bore his wife to the grave in a kind of triumphal procession. Hieronym. Epist. xci. p. 745.

general tribunal for all matters relating to testaments.

Thus religion laid its sacred control on all the material incidents of human life, and around the ministers of religion gathered all the influence thus acquired over the sentiments of mankind. font of baptism usually received the Christian infant, and the form of baptism was uttered by the priest or bishop; the marriage was unhallowed without the priestly benediction; and at the close of life, the minister of religion was at hand to absolve and to reassure the departing spirit; at the funeral, he ratified, as it were, the solemn promises of immortality. But the great, permanent, and per- Penitenpetual source of sacerdotal authority was the pline. penitential discipline of the Church, which was universally recognised as belonging exclusively to the jurisdiction of the clergy. Christianity had sufficient power, to a certain degree, to engross the mind and heart, but not to keep under perpetual restraint the unruly passions or the inquisitive mind. The best were most conscious of human infirmity, and jealous of their own slight aberrations from the catholic belief; the bad had not merely their own conscience, but public fame and the condemnatory voice of the community, to prostrate them before the visible arbiters of the All-seeing Power. Sin, from the most heinous delinquency, or the darkest heresy, to the most trivial fault or the slightest deviation from the established belief, could only be reconciled by the advice, the guidance, at length by the direct authority, of the priest. He judged of its magnitude, he prescribed the appointed penance. The hierarchy were supposed to be invested with the keys of heaven and of hell; they undoubtedly held those which unlock the human heart,—fear and hope. And when once the mind was profoundly affected by Christianity, when hope had failed to excite to more generous obedience, they applied the baser and more servile instrument without scruple and without remorse.

VOL. III. D D

The penitential discipline of the Church, no doubt, grewup, like otherusages, by slow degrees; its regulations were framed into a system to meet the exigences of the times; but we discern, at a very early period, the awful power of condemning to the most profound humiliation, to the most agonising contrition, to the shame of public confession, to the abasing supplication before the priest, to long seclusion from the privileges and the society of the Christian community. Even then public confession was the first process in the fearful yet inevitable ceremonial. "Confession of sin," says Tertullian*, "is the proper discipline for the abasement and humiliation of man; it enforces that mode of life which can alone find mercy with God; it prescribes the fitting dress and food of the penitent to be in sackcloth and ashes, to darken the body with filth, to depress the soul with anguish; it allows only the simplest food, enough and no more than will maintain life. Constantly to fast and pray, to groan, to weep, to howl day and night before the Lord our God, to CHAP. grovel at the feet of the presbyter, to kneel at the altar of God, to implore from all the brethren their deprecatory supplications." Subsequently, the more complete penitential system rigidly regulated the most minute particulars; the attitude, the garb, the language, or the more expressive silence. place in which the believer stood, showed to the whole Church how far the candidate for salvation through Christ had been thrown back in his spiritual course, what progress he was making to pardon and The penitent was clothed in sackcloth, his head was strewn with ashes; men shaved their heads. women left their dishevelled hair flung over their bosoms, they wore a peculiar veil; the severest attendance on every religious service was exacted. all diversions were proscribed, marriage was not permitted during the time of penance, the lawful indulgence of the marriage bed was forbidden. Although a regular formulary, which gradually grew into use, imposed canonical penances of a certain period for certain offences, yet that period might be rigidly required or shortened by the authority of the bishop. For some offences, the penitent, who it was believed was abandoned to the power of Satan, was excluded from all enjoyment, all honour, and all society, to the close of life; and the doors of reconciliation were hardly opened to the departing spirit,—wonderful proof how profoundly the doctrines of Christianity had sunk into the human heart, and of the enormous power

[•] De Pœnitentià, c. 9.

(and what enormous power is not liable to abuse) in which the willing reverence of the people had invested the priesthood.

But something more fearful still remained. Over all the community hung the tremendous sentence of excommunication, tantamount to a sentence of spiritual death.* This sentence, though not as yet dependent on the will, was pronounced and executed by the religious magistrate. The clergy adhered to certain regular forms of process, but the ultimate decree rested with them.

zcommucation. Excommunication was of two kinds; first, that which excluded from the communion, and threw back the initiate Christian into the ranks of the uninitiate. This separation or suspension allowed the person under ban to enter the church, to hear the psalms and sermon, and, in short, all that was permitted to the catechumen.

But the more terrible excommunication by anathema altogether banished the delinquent from the church and the society of Christians; it annulled for ever his hopes of immortality through Christ; it drove him out as an outcast to the dominion of the Evil Spirit. The Christian might not comunicate with him in the ordinary intercourse of life; he was a moral leper, whom it was the solemn duty tali gladio superbi et contumaces necantur, dum de ecclesià ejiciuntur. Cyprian. Epist. lxii.

Nunc agit in ecclesia excommunicatio, quod agebat tunc in interfectis. Augustin. Q. 39. in Deuteron.

^{*} Interfici Deus jussit sacerdotibus non obtemperantes, judicibus à se ad tempus constitutis non obedientes; sed tunc quidem gladio occidebantur, quando adhuc et circumcisio carnis manebat. Nunc autem quia circumcisio spiritalis esse apud fideles Dei servos cepit, spiri-

of all to avoid, lest they should partake in his contagion. The sentence of one church was rapidly promulgated throughout Christendom; and the excommunicated in Egypt or Syria found the churches in Gaul or Spain closed against him: he was an exile without a resting place. As long as Heathenism survived, at least in equal temporal power and distinction, and another society received with welcome, or at least with undiminished respect, the exile from Christianity, the excommunicated might lull his remaining terrors to rest, and forget, in the business or dis sipation of theworld, his forfeited hopes of immortality. But when there was but one society. that of the Christians, throughout the world, or at best but a feeble and despised minority, he stood a marked and branded man. Those who were, perhaps, not better Christians, but who had escaped the fatal censures of the Church, would perhaps seize the opportunity of showing their zeal by avoiding the outcast: if he did not lose civil privileges, he lost civil estimation; he was altogether excluded from human respect and human sympathies; he was a legitimate, almost a designated, object of scorn, distrust, and aversion.

The nature, the extent, and some of the moral and even political advantages of excommunication, are illustrated in the act of the celebrated Synesius. Synesius. The power of the Christian bishop, in his hands, appears under its noblest and most beneficial form. Synesius became a Christian bishop without renouncing the habits, the language, and, in a great degree, the opinions, of a philosopher. His writings, more especially his Odes, blend, with a very scanty Christianity, the mystic theology of the later Platonism: but it is rather philosophy adopting Christian language, than Christianity moulding philosophy to its own uses. Yet so high was the character of Synesius, that even the worldly prelate of Alexandria, Theophilus, approved of his elevation to the episcopate in the obscure town of Ptolemais near Cyrene. Synesius felt the power with which he was invested, and employed it with a wise vigour and daring philanthropy, which commanded the admiration both of philosophy and of religion. The low-born Andronicus was the prefect or rather the scourge and tyrant of Libya; his exactions were unprecedented, and enforced by tortures of unusual cruelty, even in that age and country. The province groaned and bled, without hope of relief, under the hateful and sanguinary oppression. Synesius had tried in vain the milder language of persuasion upon the intractable tyrant. At length he put forth the terrors of the Church to shield the people; and for his rapacity, which had amounted to sacrilege, and for his inhumanity, the president of the whole province was openly condemned, by a sentence of excommunication, to the public abhorrence, excluded from the society and denied the common rights of men. He was expelled from the church, as the Devil from Paradise; every Christian temple, every sanctuary, was closed against the man of blood; the priest was not even to permit him the rights of Christian burial; every priwate man and every magistrate was to exclude him from their houses and from their tables. If the rest of Christendom refused to ratify and execute the sentence of the obscure Church of Ptolemais, they were guilty of the sin of schism. The Church of Ptolemais would not communicate or partake of the divine mysteries with those who thus violated ecclesiastical discipline. The excommunication included the accomplices of his guilt, and by a less justifiable extension of power, their families. Andronicus quailed before the interdict, which he feared might find countenance in the court of Constantinople; bowed before the protector of the people, and acknowleged the justice of his sentence.*

The salutary thunder of sacerdotal excommunication might here and there strike some eminent delinquent †; but ecclesiastical discipline, which in the earlier and more fervent period of the religion, had watched with holy jealousy the whole life of the individual, was baffled by the increase of votaries, which it could no longer submit to this severe and constant superintendence. The clergycould not command, nor the laity require, the sacred duty of secession and outward penance, from the multitude of sinners, when they were the larger part of the should the man in power treat his message with contempt, letters shall be sent to all the bishops of the province, declaring him excommunicated till he has heard the cause or made restitution. Can xi. Labbe, ii. 1225.

DD 4

^{*} Synesii Epistolæ, lvii. lviii.
† There is a canon of the Council of Toledo (A.D. 408.) that if any man in power shall have robbed one in holy orders, or a poor man (quemlibet pauperiorem), or a monk, and the bishop shall send to demand a hearing for the cause, community. But heresy of opinions was more early detected than heresy of conduct. Gradually, from a moral as well as a religious power, the discipline became almost exclusively religious, or rather confined itself to the speculative, while it almost almodoned in despair the practical effects of religion. Heresy became the one great crime for which excommunication was pronounced in its most awful form; the heretic was the one being with whom it was criminal to associate, who forfeited all the privileges of religion, and all the charities of life.

Ecclarisation cal consume discby confund to humay.

Executed by the State.

Nor was this all; in pursuit of the heretic, the Church was not content to rest within her own sphere, to wield her own arms of moral temperament, and to exclude from her own territory. She formed a fatal alliance with the State, and raised that which was strictly an ecclesiastical, an offence against the religious community, into a civil crime, amenable to temporal penalties. The Church, when she ruled the mind of a religious or superstitious emperor, could not forego the immediate advantage of his authority to further her own cause, and hailed his welcome intrusion on her own internal legislation. In fact, the autocracy of the Emperor over the Church, as well as over the State, was asserted in all those edicts which the Church, in its blind zeal, hailed with transport as the marks of his allegiance, but which confounded in inextricable, and to the present time, in deplorable confusion, the limits of the religious and the civil power. The imperial rescripts, which made heresy a civil offence, by affixing penalties which were not purely religious, trespassed as much upon the real princi- CHAP. ples of the original religious republic, as against the immutable laws of conscience and Christian charity. The tremendous laws of Theodosius*, constituting Civil heresy a capital offence, punishable by the civil for ecclesipower, are said to have been enacted only as a terror astical offences. to evil-believers, but they betrayed too clearly the darkening spirit of the times; the next generation would execute what the laws of the last would enact. The most distinguished bishops of the time raised a cry of horror at the first executions for religion; but it was their humanity which was startled; they did not perceive that they had sanctioned, by the smallest civil penalty, a false and fatal principle; that though, by the legal establishment, the Church and the State had become, in one sense, the same body, yet the associating principle of each remained entirely distinct, and demanded an entirely different and independent system of legislation, and administration of the law. The Christian hierarchy bought the privilege of persecution at the price of Christian independence.

It is difficult to decide whether the language of the book in the Theodosian code, entitled "On Heretics," contrasts more strongly with the comprehensive, equitable, and parental tone of the Roman jurisprudence, or with the gentle and benevolent spirit of the Gospel, or even with the primary principles of the ecclesiastical community. † The Em-

^{} See ch. viii. vol. iii. p. 184. nentur, et latis adversus eos sanctionibus debent succumbere, qui peror, of his sole and supreme authority, without any recognition of ecclesiastical advice or sanction; the Emperor, who might himself be an Arian or Eunomian, or Manichean-who had so recently been an Arian, defines heresy the very slightest deviation from Catholic verity, and in a succession of statutes inflicts civil penalties, and excludes from the common rights of men, the maintainers of certain opinions. Nothing treasonable, immoral, dangerous to the peace of society, is alleged; the crime, the civil crime, as it now becomes, consists solely in opinions. The law of Constantine, which granted special immunities to certain of his subjects, might perhaps, with some show of equity, confine those immunities to a particular class. But the gradually darkening statutes proceed from the withholding of privileges to the prohibition of their meetings t, then through confiscation $\frac{1}{2}$, the refusal of the common right of bequeathing property, fine §, exile |, to capital punishment. The latter, indeed, was enacted only against some of the more obscure sects, and some of the Donatists, whose turbulent and se-vel levi argumento à judicio Catholicæ religionis et tramite detecti fuerint deviare. This is a law of Arcadius. The practice was more lenient than the law.

^{*} The first law of Constantine restricts the immunities which he grants to Catholics. Cod. Theodos. xvi.

[†] The law of Gratian (IV.) confiscates the houses or even fields in which heretical conventicles are held. See also law of Theodosius, viii.

[†] Leges xi. xii. ∮ Ibid. xxi.

[|] Ibid. xviii. liii. lviii.
| The law of Theodosius enacts this not against the general body, but some small sections of Manicheans, "Summo supplicio et inexpiabili pœnâ jubemus affligi." ix. This law sanctions the ill-omened name of inquisitors. Compare law xxxv. The "interminata pœna" of law lx. is against Eunomians, Arians, and Macedonians.

ditious conduct might demand the interference of CHAP. the civil power; but still they are condemned not as rebels and insurgents but as heretics.*

Objects of

In building up this vast and majestic fabric of the great defenders the hierarchy, though individuals might be actuated hierarchical by personal ambition or interest, and the narrow power. corporate spirit might rival loftier motives in the consolidation of ecclesiastical power, yet the great object, which was steadily, if dimly seen, was the advancement of mankind in religion, and through religion to temporal and eternal happiness. zled by the glorious spectacle of provinces, of nations, gradually brought within the pale of Christianity, the great men of the fourth century of Christianity were not and could not be endowed with prophetic sagacity to discern the abuses of sacerdotal domination, and the tyranny which, long centuries after, might be exercised over the human mind in the name of religion. We may trace the hierarchical principle of Cyprian or of Ambrose to what may seem their natural consequences, religious crusades and the fires of the inquisition; we may observe the tendency of unsocial monasticism to quench the charities of life, to harden into cruelty, grovel into licentiousness, and brood over its own ignorance; we may trace the predestinarian doctrines of Augustine darkening into narrow bigotry, or maddening to uncharitable fanaticism; they only contemplated, they only could contemplate, a great moral and religious power opposing civil tyra or at least affording a refuge from it; purify domestic morals, elevating and softening the hum heart*; a wholesome and benevolent force pelling men by legitimate means to seek wisdom virtue, and salvation; the better part of manhail withdrawing, in holy prudence and wise timidity, from the corruptions of a foul and cruel age, and devoting itself to its own self-advancement, to the highest spiritual perfection; and the general pions assertion of the universal and unlimited providence and supremacy of God. None but the hopeful achieve great revolutions; and what hopes could equal those which the loftier Christian minds might justly entertain of the beneficent influences of Christianity?

^{*} Ad Heraclianum, lvi. The sions of the civil upon the ecclesi-imperial laws against second bap- astical authority. xvi. tit. vi. tisms are still more singular inva-

We cannot wonder at the growth of the ecclesiastical power, if the Church were merely considered

* The laws bear some pleasing testimonies to the activity of Christian benevolence in many of the obscure scenes of human wretchedness. See the humane law regarding prisoners, that they might have proper food, and the use of the bath. Nee deerit antistitum Christianæ religionis cura laudabilis, quæ ad observationem constituti judicis hanc ingerat monitionem. The Christian bishop was to take care that the judge did his duty. Cod. Theodos. ix. 3. 7.

As early as the reign of Valentinian and Valens, prisoners were released at Easter (ob diem paschæ, quem intimo corde celebramus), excepting those committed for the crimes of treason, poisoning, magic, adultery, rape, or homicide, ix. 36. 3, 4. These statutes were constantly renewed, with the addition of some more excepted crimes—sacrilege, robbery of tombs, and coining.

There is a very singular law of Arcadius prohibiting the clergy and the monks from interfering with the execution of the laws, and forcibly taking away condemned criminals from the hands of justice. They were allowed, at the same time, the amplest privilege of merciful intercession. This was connected with the privilege of asylum. Codex Theodos. ix. 40. 16.

There is another singular law by which corporal punishments were not to be administered in Lent, except against the Isaurian robers, who were to be dealt with without delay. ix. 35. 5, 6, 7.

B a new sphere in which human genius, virtue, and CHAP. benevolence, might develope their unimpeded enrgies, and rise above the general debasement.

This was almost the only way in which any man tage of the could devote great abilities or generous activity to clerical station a useful purpose with reasonable hopes of success. The civil offices were occupied by favour and intrigue, often acquired most easily and held most permanently by the worst men for the worst purposes; the utter extinction of freedom had left no course of honourable distinction, as an honest advocate or an independent jurist; literature was worn out; rhetoric had degenerated into technical subtlety; philosophy had lost its hold upon the mind; even the great military commands were filled by fierce and active barbarians, on whose energy Rome relied for the protection of her In the Church alone was security, frontiers. influence, independence, fame, even wealth, and the opportunity of serving mankind. was the only rostrum from which the orator would be heard: feeble as was the voice of Christian poetry, it found an echo in the human heart: the episcopate was the only office of dignity which could be obtained without meanness, or exercised without fear. Whether he sought the peace of a contemplative, or the usefulness of an active life, this was the only sphere for the man of conscious mental strength; and if he felt the inward satisfaction that he was either securing his own, or advancing the salvation of others, the lofty mind tribes, without a guardian or sacred depositary; CHAP. it is difficult adequately to darken the picture of gnorance, violence, confusion, and wretchedness; put without this adequate conception of the probable tate of the world without it, it is impossible to udge with fairness or candour the obligations of Europe and of civilisation to the Christian hierrchy.

Book IV.

CHAP. I

MINE SECULE

Public

THE Greek and Roman inhabitumes of the e were attached with equal intensity in their invariance apectacles, whether of more solemn religions gin, or of lighter and more festive kind. amusements are perhaps more congenial in the southern character, from the greater exceeding of temperament, the less variable climate which rarely interferes with enjoyment in the open is, and throughout the Roman world, had long i fortered by those republican institutions which gave to every citizen a place and an interest in all public ceremonials, and which, in this respect, soil survived the institutions themselves. lation of the great capitals had preserved only the dangerous and pernicious part of freedom, the power of subsisting either without regular isdustry or with but moderate exertion. The perpetual distribution of corn, and the various hrgesses at other times, emancipated them in a great degree from the wholesome control of their own necessities; and a vast and uneducated multitude was maintained in idle and dissolute inactivity. It was absolutely necessary to occupy much of this vacant time with public diversions; and the invention, the wealth, and the personal exertions of the higher orders, were taxed to gratify this insatiable appetite. Policy demanded that which ambition and the love of popularity had freely supplied in the days of the republic, and which personal vanity continued to offer, though with less prodigal and willing munificence. The more retired and domestic habits of Christianity might in some degree seclude a sect from the public diversions, but it could not change the nature or the inveterate habits of a people: it was either swept along by, or contented itself with giving a new direction to, the impetuous and irresistible current; it was obliged to substitute some new excitement for that which it peremptorily prohibited, and reluctantly to acquiesce in that which it was unable to suppress.

Christianity had cut off that part of the public spectacles which belonged exclusively to Paganism. Even if all the temples at Rome were not, as Jerome asserts, covered with dust and cobwebs*, yet, notwithstanding the desperate efforts of the old aristocracy, the tide of popular interest, no doubt, set away from the deserted and mouldering fanes of the Heathen deities, and towards the churches of the Christians. And if this was the case in Rome, at Constantinople and throughout the empire, the Pagan ceremonial was either extinct, or gradually expiring, or lingering on in unimpressive

EЕ

^{*} Fuligine et aranearum telis bra semiruta, currit ad martyrum omnia Romæ templa cooperta tuniulos. Epist. lvii. p. 590. sunt: inundans populus ante delu-

regularity. On the other hand, the modest unimposing ritual of Christianity naturally, almost necessarily, expanded into pomp and nity. To the deep devotion of the early C tians the place and circumstances of wor were indifferent: piety finds every where its temple. In the low and unfurnished chamber the forest, in the desert, in the catacomb, Christian adored his Redeemer, prayed, char his hymn, and partook of the sacred eleme Devotion wanted no accessories; faith needed subsidiary excitement; or if it did, it found th in the peril, the novelty, the adventurous sirring character of the scene, or in the vi meanness and poverty, contrasted with the go grous worship which it had abandoned; in it mutual attachment, and in the fervent emulation which spreads throughout a small community. But among the more numerous and hereditar Christians of this period, the temple and the soleme service were indispensable to enforce and magnitum the devotion. Religion was not strong everyth to dichar, and far too earnest to decline, and community of advancing her cause. The service of advancing her cause. The effective of the manifely perception of that which was felt to dich was adopted to enforce awe; that which minds when there, became sanctified to the use of with the triumph of the faith, and enlarged itself to receive the multiplying votaries. Christianity disdained that its God and its Redeemer should be less magnificently honoured than the dæmons of Paganism. In the service it delighted to transfer and to breathe, as it were, a sublimer sense into the common appellations of the Pagan worship, whether from the ordinary ceremonial, or the more secret mysteries. The church became a temple *; the table of the communion an altar; the celebration of the Eucharist the appalling or the unbloody sacrifice.† The ministering functionaries multiplied with the variety of the ceremonial; each was consecrated to his office by a lower kind of ordination; but a host of subordinate attendants by degrees swelled the officiating train. The incense, the garlands, the lamps, all were gradually adopted by zealous rivalry, or seized as the lawful spoils of vanquished Paganism, and consecrated to the service of Christ.

Loigh.

CHAP. II.

The Church rivalled the old Heathen mysteries in expanding by slow degrees its higher privileges. Christianity was itself the great Mystery, unfolded gradually and in general after a long and searching probation. It still reserved the power of opening at once its gates to the more distinguished proselytes, and of jealously and tardily unclosing them to more doubtful neophytes. It permitted its sanctuary, as it were, to be stormed at once by eminent virtue and unquestioned zeal; but the common mass of mankind were never allowed to consider it less than a hard-won privilege to be received into the Church; and this boon was not to be dispensed with lavish or careless hands. Its preparatory ceremonial of abstinence, personal purity, ablution, secrecy, closely resembled that of the Pagan mysteries (perhaps each may have contributed to the other); so the theologic dialect of Christianity spoke the same language. Yet Chris tianity substituted for the feverish enthusiasa some of these rites, and the phantasmagoric terms of others, with their vague admonitions to puting a searching but gently administered moral cipline, and more sober religious excitement retained, indeed, much of the dramatic port though under another form.

^{*} Ambrose and Lactantius, and + The φρίκτη, or the ἀναίμακτος even Irenæus, use this term. See θνσία.

Bingham, b. viii, 1. 4.

OOK

The divisions between the different order worshippers enforced by the sacerdotal author ity, and observed with humble submission by people, could not but impress the mind with nishment and awe. The stranger, on entering spacious open court, which was laid out before the more splendid churches, with porticos or cloistes on each side, beheld first the fountain or tank where the worshippers were expected to wash the hands, and purify themselves, as it were, for the divine presence. Lingering in these portices, & approaching timidly the threshold which they dared catechumenus, quis fidelis, incerto est: pariter adeunt, pariter orant Even the Heathen were admitted; tinction between the catechumens thus "pearls were cast before and the faithful. "Imprimis quis swine." De Præscript. Hæret. c.41.

^{} It is one of the bitterest charges of Tertullian against the heretics. that they did not keep up this dis-not pass, or, at the farthest, entering only into the CHAP. first porch, or vestibule, and pressing around the disciples to solicit their prayers, he would observe The porch. men, pale, dejected, clad in sackcloth, oppressed with the profound consciousness of their guilt, acquiescing in the justice of the ecclesiastical censure, which altogether excluded them from the Christian community. These were the first class The of penitents, men of notorious guilt, whom only penitents a long period of this humiliating probation could admit even within the hearing of the sacred service. As he advanced to the gates, he must pass the scrutiny of the doorkeepers, who guarded the admission into the church, and distributed each class of worshippers into their proper place. stranger, whether Heathen or Jew, might enter into the part assigned to the catechumens or novices and the penitents of the second order (the hearers), that he might profit by the religious instruction.†

* There is much difficulty and confusion respecting these divi-sions of the church. The fact probably is, that, according to the period or the local circumstances, the structure and the arrangement were more or less complicated. Tertullian says distinctly, "non modò limine verum omni ecclesiæ tecto submovemus." Where the churches were of a simpler form, and had no roofed narthex or vestibule, these penitents stood in the open court before the church; even later, the flentes and the hiemantes formed a particular class.

A canon of St. Gregory Thaumaturgus gives the clearest view of these arrangements: Ἡ πρόσκλαυσις έξω τῆς πύλης τοῦ εὐκτηρίου έστιν, ένθα έστωτα τὸν άμαρτάνοντα χρή των είσιόντων δεισθαί πιστών υπέρ αὐτοῦ εὕχεσθαι ή ἀκρόασις ἔνδοθι τῆς πύλης ἐν τῷ νάρθηκι, ἔνθα έστάναι χρή τὸν ἡμαρτήκοτα, ἕως τῶν κατηχουμένων, καὶ ἐντεῦθεν εξέρχεσθαι άκούων γάρ φησι των γραφών και της διδασκαλίας, Ικδαλέσθω, καὶ μὴ ἀξιούσθω προσευχῆς ἡ δὲ ὑπόπτωσις, ἴνα ἔσωθεν τῆς πύλης τοῦ ναοῦ ἰστάμενος, μετά τῶν κατηχουμένων έξέρχηται ή σύστασις. ϊνα συνίσταται τοῖς πιστοῖς καὶ μή εξέρχηται μετά τῶν κατηχουμένων τελευταΐον η μέθεξις των άγιασμάτων. Apud Labbe, Conc. i. p. 842.

+ This part of the church was usually called the narthex. But this IV.

MX-

He found himself in the first division of the main body of the church, of which the walls were lined by various marbles, the roof often ceiled with mosaic, and supported by lofty columns, with gilded capitals; the doors were inlaid with ivory or silver; the distant altar glittered with precious stones. In the midst of the nave stood the pulpit, or readingdesk (the ambo), around which were arranged the singers, who chanted to the most solemn music, poetry, much of it familiar to the Jew, as belonging to his own sacred writings, to the Heathen full of the noblest images, expressive of the divine power and goodness; adapting itself with the most exquisite versatility to every devout emotion, melting into the most pathetic tenderness, or swelling out into the most appalling grandeur. The pulpit was then ascended by one of the inferior order, the reader of certain portions or extracts from the sacred volumes, in which God himself spoke to the awe-struck auditory. He was succeeded by an orator of a higher dignity, a presbyter or a bishop, term, I believe, of the sixth century, was not used with great precision, or rather, perhaps, was applied to different parts of the church, according to their greater or less complexity of structure. It is sometimes used for the porch or vestibule: in this sense there were several nartheces (St. Sophia had four). Mamachi (vol. i. p. 216.) insists that it was divided from the nave by a wall. But this cannot mean the narthex into which the ἀκροώμενοι were admitted, as the object of their admission was that they might hear the service.

Episcopus nullum prohibeat intrare ecclesiam, et audire verbum Dei, sive hæreticum, sive Judæum usque ad missam catechumenorum. Concil. Carthag. iv. c. 84.

Alii ædificent ecclesias, vestiant parietes marmorum crustis, columnarum moles advehant, esrumque deaurent capita, pretiosum ornatum non sentientia, ebore argentoque valvas, et gemmis distinguant altaria. Non reprehendo, non abnuo. Hieronym. Epist. viii. ad Demetriad. who sometimes addressed the people from the steps which led up to the chancel, sometimes chose the more convenient and elevated position of the ambo. The He was a man usually of the highest attainments preacher. and eloquence, and instead of the frivolous and subtile questions which the Pagan was accustomed to hear in the schools of rhetoric or philosophy, he fearlessly agitated and peremptorily decided on such eternally and universally awakening topics as the responsibility of man before God, the immortality and future destination of the soul; topics of which use could not deaden the interest to the believer, but which, to an unaccustomed ear, were as startling as important. The mute attention of the whole assembly was broken only by uncontrollable acclamations, which frequently interrupted the more moving preachers. Around the pulpit was the last order of penitents, who prostrated themselves in humble homage during the prayers, and the benediction of of the bishop.

Here the steps of the profane stranger must pause; an insuperable barrier, which he could not pass without violence, secluded the initiate from the society of the less perfect. Yet, till the more secret ceremonial began, he might behold, at dim and respectful distance, the striking scene, first of

* Chrysostom generally preached men, viii. 5. Both usages pre-from the ambo. Socr. vi. 5. Sozo- vailed in the West-

Seu te conspicuis gradibus venerabilis aræ Concionaturum plebs sedula circumsistat.

Sid. Apollon. can. xvi.

Fronte sub adversà gradibus sublime tribunal Tollitur, antistes prædicat unde Deum.

Prudent. Hymn. ad Hippolyt

the baptized worshippers in their order, the fe in general in galleries above (the virgins sep Beyond, in still furthe from the matrons). cluded sanctity, on an elevated semicircle. at the bishop, sate the clergy, attended by the deacons, acolyths, and those of inferior of Even the gorgeous throne of the Emperor below this platform. Before them was the m and awful table, the altar as it began to be in the fourth century, over which was some suspended a richly-wrought canopy (the ciboria it was covered with fine linen. In the third tury, the simpler vessels of glass or other c material had given place to silver and gold. the later persecutions, the cruelty of the He was stimulated by their avarice; and some of sufferers, while they bore their own agonies patience, were grieved to the heart to see sacred vessels pillaged, and turned to profan indecent uses. In the Eastern churches, r. embroidered curtains overshadowed the appr to the altar, or light doors secluded altoge the Holy of Holies from the profane gaze of multitude.

Such was the ordinary Christian ceremonia it addressed the mass of mankind. But at a ce time, the uninitiate were dismissed, the veil dropped which shrouded the hidden rites, doors were closed, profane steps might not a the threshold of the baptistery, or linger in church, when the Liturgy of the faithful, the of the eucharist, began. The veil of conceals was first spread over the peculiar rites of Christianity from caution. The religious assemblies were, strictly speaking, unlawful, and they were shrouded secrecy of in secrecy lest they should be disturbed by the in- the sacra-ments. trusion of their watchful enemies*; and it was this unavoidable secrecy which gave rise to the frightful fables of the Heathen concerning the nature of these murderous or incestuous banquets. they could not be public, of necessity they took the form of mysteries, and as mysteries became objects of jealousy and of awe. As the assemblies became more public, that seclusion of the more solemn rites was retained from dread and reverence, which was commenced from fear. Though profane curiosity no longer dared to take a hostile character, it was repelled from the sacred ceremony. Of the mingled multitude, Jews and Heathens, the incipient believers, the hesitating converts, who must be permitted to hear the Gospel of Christ, or the address of the preacher, none could be admitted to the sacraments. It was natural to exclude them, not merely by regulation, and the artificial division of the church into separate parts, but by the majesty which invested the last solemn rites. That which had concealed itself from fear, became itself fearful: it was no longer a timid mystery which fled the light, but an unapproachable communion with the Deity, which would not brook profane intrusion. It is an extraordinary indication of the power of ^{*} Tot hostes ejus, quot extranei et congregationibus opprimimur.  quotidiè obsidemur, quotidiè Tertull. Apologet. 7. prodimur, in ipsis plurimum cœtibus

BOOK IV.

spotless purity *, the candidate approached the baptistery, in the larger churches a separate building. There he uttered the solemn vows which pledged him to his religion. † The symbolising genius of the East added some significant ceremonies. The Catechumen turned to the West, the realm of Satan, and thrice renounced his power; he turned to the East to adore the Sun of Righteousness ‡, and to proclaim his compact with the Lord of Life. The mystic trinal number prevailed throughout; the vow was threefold, and thrice pronounced. The baptism was usually by immersion; the stripping off the clothes was emblematic of "putting off the old man;" but baptism by sprinkling was allowed, according to the exigency of the case. The water itself became, in the vivid language of the Church, the blood of Christ ||: it was compared, by a fanciful analogy, to the Red Sea: the daring metaphors of some of the Fathers might seem to assert a transmutation of its colour. §

Eucharist.

The sacrament of the Lord's Supper imper-σφραγάζα, πῶν ὅτι τιμιον. Orat. xl. de Baptism.

Almost all the Fathers of this age, Basil, the two Gregories, Ambrose (de Sacram) Augustine, Unde parens sacro ducit de fonte sacerdos Infantes niveos corpore, corde, habitu. Paulin. ad Sever.

have treatises on baptism, and vie, as it were, with each other, in their praises of its importance and efficacy.

† Cyril. Catech. Mystag. Hieronym. in Amos, vi. 14.

[†] Chrysostom in two places gives the Eastern profession of faith, which was extremely simple, "I renounce Satan, his pomp and worship, and am united to Christ. I believe in the resurrection of the dead." See references in Montfauçon, ubi suprà.

[§] Unde rubet Baptismus Christi, nisi Christi sanguine consecratur August. Tract. in Johan. Compare Bingham, xi. 10. 4.

ceptibly acquired the solemnity, the appellation, of CHAP. a sacrifice. The poetry of devotional language kindled into the most vivid and realising expressions of awe and adoration. No imagery could be too bold, no words too glowing, to impress the soul more profoundly with the sufferings, the divinity, the intimate union of the Redeemer with his disciples. The invisible presence of the Lord, which the devout felt within the whole church, but more particularly in its more holy and secluded part, was gradually concentrated as it were upon the altar. The mysterious identification of the Redeemer with the consecrated elements was first felt by the mind, till, at a later period, a material and corporeal transmutation began to be asserted; that which the earlier Fathers, in their boldest figure, called a bloodless sacrifice, became an actual oblation of the body and blood of Christ. But all these fine and subtile distinctions belong to a later theology. In the dim vagueness, in the ineffable and inexplicable mystery, consisted much of its impressiveness on the believer, the awe and dread of the uninitiate.

These Sacraments were the sole real Mysteries; their nature and effects were the hidden knowledge which was revealed to the perfect alone.* In Alexandria, where the imitation or rivalry of et non publicum in Ecclesià, Sacra-mentum Baptismi, Sacramentum treatise of Casaubon, the xivth of Eucharistiæ. Opera nostra bona vident et Pagani, Sacramenta vero occultantur illis. Augustine, in Psalm 103. Ordination appears considered too holy to be uttered by unbaptised CHAP. It was said that none but the baptised could, properly address the Almighty as his Father.*

* Quid est quod occultum est to have been a secret rite. Cahis Exercitationes Anti-Baronianæ, which in general is profound and judicious.

That care which Christianity had assumed over Christian the whole life of man, it did not abandon after death. In that solemn season it took in charge the body, which, though mouldering into dust, was to be revived for the resurrection. The respect and honour which human nature pays to the remains of the dead, and which, among the Greeks especially, had a strong religious hold upon the feelings, was still more profoundly sanctified by the doctrines and usages of Christianity. The practice of inhumation which prevailed in Egypt and Syria, and in other parts of the East, was gradually extended over the whole western world by Christianity.† The funeral pyre went out of use, and the cemeteries, which from the earliest period belonged to the Christians, were gradually enlarged for the general reception, not of the ashes only in their urns, but for the entire remains of the dead. The Eastern practice of embalming was so general‡, that Ter-

* Bingham, i. 4. 7. and x. 5. 9. + Nec, ut creditis, ullum damnum sepulturæ timemus, sed veterem et meliorem consuetudinem humandi frequentamus. The speaker goes on, in very elegant language, to adduce the analogy of the death and revival of nature, - Expectandum etiam nobis corporis ver est. Minuc. Fel. edit. Ouzel, p. 327. During the time of the plague in Alexandria and Carthage, the Christians not only buried their own dead, but likewise those of the Pagans. Dion. Alex. apud Euseb. Hist. vii. 22. Pontius, in Vitâ Compare a curious Cypriani. Essay in the Vermischte Schriften of Böttiger, iii. 14. Verbrennen oder Beerdigen.

1 Titulumque et frigida saxa Liquido spargemus odore. Prudent. Hym. de Exeq. Martyris hi tumulum studeant perfundere nardo Et medicata pio referant unguenta sepulcro. Paul. Nol. in Nat. C. Fel.

tullian boasts that the Christians consumed more of the merchandise of Sabæa in their interments than the Heathens in the fumigations before the altars of their Gods.* The general tone of the simple inscriptions spoke of death but as a sleep; "he sleeps in peace" was the common epitaph: the very name of the inclosure, the cemetery, implied the same trust in its temporary occupancy; those who were committed to the earth only awaited the summons to a new life.† Gradually the cemetery was, in some places, closely connected with the church. Where the rigid interdict against burying within the walls of cities was either inapplicable or not enforced, the open court before the Church became the place of burial.‡

Christian funerals began early in their period of security and opulence to be celebrated with great magnificence. Jerome compares the funeral proaffirms that these odours were plainly perceptible on opening some says, "you expect that your women

* Apologet. c. 42. Boldetti tiani, iii. p. 83. The judge in the acts of Tarachus (Ruinart, p. 385.) of the christian cemeteries at Rome. See Mamachi, Costumi dei Chris-and spices."

> + Hine maxima cura sepulchris Impenditur, hinc resolutos Honor ultimus accipit artus Et funeris ambitus ornat.

Quid nam tibi saxa cavata, Quid pulchra volunt monumenta? Res quod nisi creditur illis Non mortua, sed data somno.

Prudent. in Exeq. Defunct.

† There is a law of Gratian, was still common), within the walls Valentinian and Theodosius, for-bidding burial, or the deposition of urns (which shows that cremation martyrs. Cod. Theod. ix. 17. 6. cession of Fabiola to the triumphs of Camillus, Scipio, or Pompey. The character of this female, who founded the first hospital in Rome, and lavished a splendid fortune in alms-giving, may have mainly contributed to the strong interest excited by her interment. All Rome was poured forth. The streets, the windows, the tops of houses, were crowded with spectators. Processions of youths and of old men preceded the bier, chaunting the praises of the deceased. As it passed, the churches were crowded, and psalms were sung, and their golden roofs rang with the sublime Alleluia.

The doctrine of the Resurrection of the body worship deepened the common and natural feeling of respect of the Martyra. for the remains of the dead*: the worship of the

* In one of the very curious essays of M. Raoul Rochette, Mémoires de l'Académie, he has illustrated the extraordinary care with which the heathen buried along with the remains of the dead, every kind of utensil, implement of trade, down to the dolls of children; even ood and knives and forks. This appears from all the tombs which are opened, from the most ancient Etruscan to the most modern heathen sepulchres. "Il y avait là une notion confuse et grossière sans doute de l'immortalité de l'âme, mais il s'y trouvait aussi la reuve sensible et palpable de cet nstinct de l'homme, qui repugne à 'idée de la destruction de son être, et qui y resiste de toutes les forces le son intelligence et de toutes les erreurs même de la raison," p. 689. But it is a more remarkable fact that he Christians long adhered to the same usages, notwithstanding the purer and loftier notions of another life bestowed by their religion. "La première observation qui s'offre à Boldetti luimême et qui devra frapper tous les esprits, c'est qu'en décorant les tombeaux de seurs frères de tant d'objets de pur ornament, ou d'usage réel, les Chrétiens n'avaient pu être dirigés que par ce motif d'espérance qui leur faisait considérer le tombeau comme un lieu de passage, d'ou ils devaient sortir avec toutes les conditions de l'immortalité, et la mort, comme un sommeil paisible, au sein duquel il ne pouvait leur être indif-férent de se trouver environnés des objets qui leur avaient été chers durant la vie ou de l'image de ces objets," tom. xiii. p. 692.

The heathen practice of burying money, sometimes large sums, with the dead, was the cause of the very BOOK IV.

relics of saints and martyrs still farther contibuted to the same effect. If the splendid but occasional ceremony of the apotheosis of the deceased emperor was exploded, a ceremony which, lavished as it frequently had been on the worst and basest of mankind, however it might amuse and excite the populace, could not but provoke the contempt of the virtuous; in the Christian world a continual, and in some respects more rational, certainly more modest, apotheosis was constantly The more distinguished Christians celebrated. were dismissed, if not to absolute deification, to immortality, to a state, in which they retained profound interest in, and some influence over, the condition of men. During the perilous and gloomy days of persecution, the reverence for those who endured martyrdom for the religion of Christ had grown up out of the best feelings of man's improved nature. Reverence gradually grew into veneration, worship, adoration. Although the more rigid theology maintained a marked distinction severe laws against the violations of the tombs. In fact, these treasures were so great, as to be a source of revenue, which the government was unwilling to share with unlicensed plunderers. Et si aurum, ut dicitur, vel argentum fuerit tuå indagatione detectum, compendio publico fideliter vindicabis, ita tamen ut abstineatis a cincribus mortuorum. Ædificia tegant cineres, columnæ vel marmora ornent sepulera: talenta non teneant, qui commercia virorum reli-Aurum enim justè querunt. sepulcro detrahitur, ubi dominus non habetur; imò cul pe genus est inutiliter abdita relinquere mortuorum, unde se vita potest sustentare viventium. Such are the instructions of the minister of Theodoric. Cassiod. Var. iv. 34.

But it is still more strange, that the Christians continued this practice, particularly of the piece of money in the mouth, which the Heathen intended for the payment of Charon. It continued to the time of Thomas Aquinas, who, according to M.R.Rochette, wrote against it.

between the honours shown to the martyrs and CHAP. that addressed to the Redeemer and the Supreme, Being, the line was too fine and invisible not to be transgressed by excited popular feeling. Heathen writers constantly taunt the Christians with the substitution of the new idolatry for the old. The charge of worshipping dead men's bones and the remains of malefactors, constantly recurs. A Pagan philosopher, as late as the fourth century. contemptuously selects some barbarous names of African martyrs, and inquires whether they are more worthy objects of worship than Minerva or Jove.*

The festivals in honour of the martyrs were Festivals. avowedly instituted, or at least conducted on a sumptuous scale, in rivalry of the banquets which formed so important and attractive a part of the Pagan ceremonial.† Besides the earliest Agapæ, which gave place to the more solemn Eucharist, there were other kinds of banquets, at marriages and funerals, called likewise Agapæ‡; but those of the martyrs

• Quis enim ferat Jovi fulmina vibranti præferri Mygdonem; Ju-noni, Minervæ, Veneri, Vestæque Sanaem, et cunctis (pro nefas) Diis immortalibus archimartyrem Nymphanionem, inter quos Lucitas haud minore cultu suscipitur atque alii interminato numero; Disque hominibusque odiosa nomina. See Augustin. Epist. xvi.

+ Cum factà pace, turbæ Gentilium in Christianum nomen venire cupientes, hoc impedirentur, quod dies festos cum idolis suis solerent in abundantia epularum et ebrietate consumere, nec facilè ab his perniciosissimis et tam vetustissimis voluptatibus se possent abstinere, visum fuisse majoribus nostris, ut huic infirmitatis parti interim parceretur, diesque festos, post eos, quos relinquebant, alios in honorem sanctorum martyrum vel non simili sacrilegio, quamvis simili luxu celebrarentur. Au-gustin. Epist. xxix. p. 52. ‡ Gregory Nazianzen mentions the three kinds.

Ούδ' ἱερὴν ἐπὶ δαῖτα γενέθλιον, ἡὲ θανόντος,

"Η τινα νυμφιδίην σῦν πλεονίσσι Θεων. Carm. x.

BOOK IV. were the most costly and magnificent. The former were of a more private nature; the poor were entertained at the cost of the married couple or the relatives of the deceased. The relationship of the martyrs extended to the whole Christian community, and united all in one bond of piety. They belonged, by a new tie of spiritual kindred, to the whole Church.

By a noble metaphor, the day of the martyrs' death was considered that of their birth to immortality; and their birthdays became the most sacred and popular festivals of the Church. At their sepulchres, or more frequently, as the public worship became more costly, in stately churches erected either over their sepulchres, or in some more convenient situation, but dedicated to their honour, these holy days commenced with the most impressive religious service. Hymns were sung in their praise (much of the early Christian poetry was composed for these occasions); the history of their lives and martyrdoms was read. (the legends which grew up into so fertile a subject for Christian

* Γενέθλια, natalitia. This custom was as early as the time of Polycarp. The day of his martyrdom was celebrated by the Church of Antioch. Euseb. lib. iv. 15. Compare Suicer, in νοce γενέθλιον. Tertullian instances the offerings for the dead, and the annual celebration of the birthdays of the martyrs, as of Apostolic tradition. Oblationes pro defunctis, in natalibus annuâ die facimus. De Coron. Mil. c. 2. Compare Exhortat. ad Cast. c. 11. In the treatise de Monogamiâ, he considers it among the sacred duties of a faithful widow, offert annuis diebus dormitionis ejus.

† At Antioch, the remains of St. Juventinus and St. Maximinus were placed in a sumptious tomb, and honoured with an annual festival. Theodoret, E. H. iii. 15.

† The author of the Acts of Ignatius wrote them, in part that the day of his martyrdom might be duly honoured. Act. Martyr. Ign. apud Cotelerium, vol. ii. p. 161. Compare Acta St. Polycarpi.

mythic fable); panegyrical orations were delivered CHAP. by the best preachers.* The day closed with an open banquet, in which all the worshippers were invited to partake. The wealthy Heathens had been accustomed to propitiate the manes of their departed friends by these costly festivals; the banquet was almost an integral part of the Heathen religious ceremony. The custom passed into the Church; and with the Pagan feeling, the festival assumed a Pagan character of gaiety and joyous excitement, and even of luxury.† In some places, the confluence of worshippers was so great that, as in the earlier, and indeed the more modern religions of Asia, the neighbourhood of the more celebrated churches of the martyrs became marts for commerce, and fairs were established on those holidays.t

As the evening drew in, the solemn and religious

There is a law of Theodosius the Great against selling the bodies of martyrs. Cod. Theod. ix. 17.7.

† Lipsius considered these Agapæ derived from the Silicernium of the ancients. Ad Tac. Ann. vi. 5. Quod illa parentalia superstitioni Gentilium essent similia. Such is the observation of Ambrose apud Augustin. Conf. vi. 2. Boldetti, a good Roman Catholic and most learned antiquarian, observes on this and other usages adopted from Paganism,—Fu anchè sentimento de' prelati di chiesa di condescendere con ciò alla debelozza de' convertiti dal Gentilesimo, per istac-carli più soavemente dell' antichi superstizioni, non levando loro affetto ma bensì convertendo in buoni i loro divertimenti. Osservazioni, p. 46. Compare Marangoni's work "dei Cose Gentilesche."

‡ Already had the Montanist asceticism of Tertullian taken alarm at the abuse of the earlier festival, which had likewise degenerated from its pious use, and with his accustomed vehemence denounced the abuse of the Agapæ among the Catholics. Apud te Agape in sæculis fervet, fides in culinis calet, spes in ferculis jacet. Sed major his est Agape, quia per hanc adolescentes tui cum sororibus dormiunt, appendices scilicet gulæ, lascivia atque luxuria est. De Jejun. c. xvii.

There are many paintings in the catacombs representing Agapæ. Raoul Rochette, Mém. des Inscrip. p. 141. The author attributes to the Agapæ held in the cemeteries, many of the cups, glasses, &c. found in the catacombs.

BOOK IV. thoughts gave way to other emotions; the wine flowed freely, and the healths of the martyrs were pledged, not unfrequently, to complete inebriety. All the luxuries of the Roman banquet were imperceptibly introduced. Dances were admitted, pantomimic spectacles were exhibited*, the festivals were prolonged till late in the evening, or to midnight, so that other criminal irregularities profaned, if not the sacred edifice, its immediate neighbourhood.

The bishops had for some time sanctioned these pious hilarities with their presence; they had freely partaken of the banquets, and their attendants were accused of plundering the remains of the feast, which ought to have been preserved for the use of the poor.†

But the scandals which inevitably arose out of these paganised solemnities awoke the slumbering vigilance of the more serious prelates. The meetings were gradually suppressed: they are denounced, with the strongest condemnation of the luxury and license with which they were celebrated in the church of Antioch, by Gregory of Na-

* Bottiger, in his prolusion on the four ages of the drama (Opera Lat. p. 326.), supposed, from a passage of St. Augustine, that there were scenic representations of the deaths of martyrs. Muller justly observes that the passage does not bear out this inference; and Augustine would scarcely have used such expressions unless of dances or mimes of less decent kind. Sanctum locum invaserat pestilentia et petulantia saltationis; per totam noctem cantabantur nefaria, et cantantibus saltabatur. August. in Natal. Cyprian. p. 311.

+ See the

† See the poem of Greg. Naz. de Div. Vit. Gener. Jerome admits the gross evils which took place during these feasts, but ascribes them to the irregularities of a youthful people, which ought not to raise a prejudice against the religion, or even against the usage. The bishops were sometimes called νεκροξοροι, feasters on the dead.

zianzum* and by Chrysostom. They were au- CHAP. thoritatively condemned by a canon of the Council of Laodicea.† In the West, they were generally held in Rome, and in other Italian cities, to a later period. The authority of Ambrose had discountenanced, if not entirely abolished, them in his diocese of Milan.‡ They prevailed to the latest time in the churches of Africa, where they were vigorously assailed by the eloquence of Augustine. The Bishop of Hippo appeals to the example of Italy and other parts of the West, in which they had never prevailed, and in which, wherever they had been known, they had been suppressed by common consent. But Africa did not surrender them without a struggle. The Manichean Faustus. in the ascetic spirit of his sect, taunts the orthodox with their idolatrous festivals. "You have but substituted your Agape for the sacrifices of the Heathen; in the place of their idols you have set up your martyrs, whom you worship with the same ceremonies as the Pagans their gods. You appease the manes of the dead with wine and with meatofferings." The answer of Augustine indignantly repels the charge of idolatry, and takes refuge in the subtile distinction in the nature of the worship offered to the martyrs. "The reverence paid to martyrs is the same with that offered to holy men in this life, only offered more freely, because they have ^{*} Carm. ccxviii., ccxix., and Oratio vi. Chrysostom, Hom. in. S. M. Julian.

[†] Conc. Harduin. t.i. p. 786.

[†] Ambros. de Jejun. c. xvii. Augustin. Confessiones, vi. 2.; see likewise Augustin. Epist. xxii. p. 28.

BOOK IV. finally triumphed in their conflict. We adore God alone, we offer sacrifice to no martyr, or to the soul of any saint, or to any angel. • • Those who intoxicate themselves by the sepulchres of the martyrs are condemned by sound doctrine. It is a different thing to approve, and to tolerate till we can amend. The discipline of Christians is one thing, the sensuality of those who thus indulge in drunkenness and the infirmity of the weak is another." •

So completely, however, had they grown into the habits of the Christian community, that in many places they lingered on in obstinate resistance to the eloquence of the great teachers of Christianity. Even the Councils pronounced with hesitating and tardy severity the sentence of condemnation against these inveterate usages, to which the people adhered with such strong attachment. That of Carthage prohibited the attendance of the clergy, and exhorted them to persuade the people, as far as possible, to abstain from these festivals; that of Orleans condemns the singing, dancing, or dissolute behaviour, in churches; that

A. D. 397.

• Cont. Faust. lib. xx. c. xxi. concourse to these festivals, and One of the poems of St. Paulinus of Nola describes the general

Et nunc ecce frequentes
Per totam et vigiles extendunt gaudia noctem, Lætitiå somnos, tenebras funalibus arcent.
Verum utinam sanis agerent hæc gaudia votis,
Nec sua liminibus miscerent gaudia sanctis.

* ignoscenda tamen puto talia parcis
Gaudia quæ ducant epulis, quia mentibus error
Irrepit rudibus, nec tantæ conscia culpæ
Simplicitas pietate cadit, male credula Sanctos Perfusis halante mero gaudere sepuleris.

Carmen ix. in St. Felicem Martyrem.

of Agde (Sens) condemns secular music, the sing- CHAP. ing of women, and banquets, in that place of which "it is written that it is a house of prayer;" fi- A. D. 578. nally, that of Trulla, held in Constantinople, as late as the beginning of the eighth century, prohibits the decking of tables in churches (the prohibition indicates the practice): and at length it provoked a formal sentence of excommunication.

But notwithstanding all its efforts to divert and Profane preoccupy the mind by these graver or at least pri-spectacles. marily religious spectacles, the passion for theatrical amusements was too strong to be repressed by Christianity. It succeeded in some humane improvements, but, in some parts, it was obliged to yield to the ungovernable torrent. The populace of an empire threatened on all sides by dangerous enemies, oppressed by a remorseless tyranny, notwithstanding the remonstrances of a new and dominant religion, imperiously demanded, and recklessly enjoyed, their accustomed diversions.* some places, that which had been a delight became a madness; and it was a Christian city which first displayed sedition and insurrection, whose streets ran with blood, from the rivalry of two factions in the circus. The older World was degenerate even in its diversions. It was not the nobler drama of Greece, or even that of Rome; neither the stately vitatis, ubique imago mortis, jacent reliquiæ infelicissimæ plebis super tumulos mortuorum suorum, et tu circenses rogas. Compare the whole passage, Salvian, de Gub.

^{*} In the fifth century, Treves, four times desolated by the barbarians, no sooner recovered its freedom, than it petitioned for the games of the circus. Ubique facies captæ urbis, ubique terror capti- Dei, vi.

BOOK tragedy, nor even the fine comedy of manners, for which the mass of the people endured the stern remonstrances of the Christian orator; but spectacles of far less intellectual pretensions, and far more likely to be injurious to Christian morals. These, indeed, were not, as we shall show hereafter. entirely obsolete, but comparatively rare and unattractive.

Heathe calender.

The Heathen calendar still regulated the amusements of the people.* Nearly 100 days in the year were set apart as festivals; the commencement of every month was dedicated to the public diversions. Besides these, there were extraordinary days of rejoicing, a victory, the birthday of the reigning Emperor, or the dedication of his statue by the prefect or the provincials of any city or district. On the accession of a new Emperor, processions always took place, which ended in the exhibition of games.† The dedication of statues to the Emperors by different cities, great victories, and other important

* The ordinary calendar of holidays, on which the courts of law did not sit, at the close of the lib. ii. viii. 11.).

Feriæ æstivæ (harvest)	•	XXX
Feriæ autumnales (vintage) -	-	XXX
Kalendæ Januarii	-	iii
Natalitia urbis Romæ	-	i
urbis Constantin	-	i
Paschæ	-	XV
Dies Solis ¹ , circiter	-	xli
Natalitia Imperatorum -	-	iv
=

Christmas-day, Epiphany, and Pentecost, were not as yet general holidays. + The Constantinian Calendar (Grævii Thesaur. viii.) reckons ninety-six days for the games, of which but few were peculiar to Rome. Muller, ii. p. 49.

¹ The other Sundays were comprised in the summer, autumnal, and Easter holidays.

events, were always celebrated with games. The Christians obtained a law from Theodosius, that games should be prohibited on the Lord's day. The African bishops, in the fifth Council of Carthage, petitioned that this prohibition might be extended to all Christian holidays. They urged that many members of the corporate bodies were obliged officially to attend on these occasions, and prevented from fulfilling their religious duties. The law of Theodosius the Elder had inhibited the celebration of games on Sundays*, one of the Younger Theodosius added at Christmas, the Epiphany, Easter, and Pentecost, and directed that the theatres should be closed, not only to the Christians, but to the impious Jews and superstitious Pagans.† But, notwithstanding this law, which must have been imperfectly carried into execution, the indignant preachers still denounce the rivalry of the games, which withdrew so many of their audience.1 The Theoretica or fund for the expenses of public The Theoretica shows and amusements, which existed not only in the two capitals, but in all the larger cities of the Empire, was first confiscated to the imperial treasury by Justinian; up to that time, the imperial policy had sanctioned and enforced this expenditure; and it is remarkable that this charge, which had been so long voluntarily borne by the ambition or the vanity of the higher orders, was first ^{*} Cod. Theod. xv. v. 2.

Theophyl. ad Autolyc. iii. p. 396.; † Cod. Theod. xv. t. 5. l. 5. A.D.
† Cod. Theod. xv. t. 5. l. 5. A.D.
425. Muller, p. 50.
† See, for the earlier period,
Apostolic Constit. ii. 60, 61, 62.;

Theophyl. ad Adulyt. iii. p. 580.; for the later, Chrysostom, pæne passim, Hom. contra Am.; Hom. in princip. Act i. 58.; Hom. in Johann.

BOOK imposed as a direct tax on individuals by a Christian Emperor. By a law of Constantine, the Senate of Rome and of Constantinople were empowered to designate any person of a certain rank and fortune for the costly function of exhibiting games in these two great cities. These were in addition to the spectacles exhibited by the consuls. other cities, decemvirs were nominated to this office.† The only exemptions were nonage, military or civil service, or a special indulgence from the Emperor. Men fled from their native cities to escape this onerous distinction. But if the charge was thrown on the treasury, the treasury could recover from the prætor or decemvir, besides assessing heavy fines for the neglect of the duty; and they were liable to be condemned to serve two years instead of one. In the Eastern provinces, this office had been joined with a kind of highpriesthood, such were the Asiarchs, the Syriarchs 1, the Bithyniarchs. The most distinguished men of the province had been proud of accepting the station of chief minister of the gods, at the expense of these sumptuous festivities. The office remained under the Christian Emperors &, but had same council condemned all who took the office of decemvir to a year's exclusion from the communion. Bingham, ubi supra.

† Malala, Chronograph, lib. zii. in art. Codex Theodos, vi. 3. 1.

Zosim. lib. ii. c. 38.

[†] See various laws of Constanstantius, regulating the office, the expenses, the fines imposed on the prætors, Cod. Theodos. vi. 3.; Laws i. 1—33. This shows the importance attached to the office. These munerarii, as well as the actors, were to do penance all their lives. Act. Conc. Illeb. can. 3. Compare Bingham, xvi. 4. 8. This degenerated into a kind of purveyor for the public CHAP. A law of Theodosius enacted that this pleasures. office should not be imposed on any one who refused to undertake it.* Another law, from which however, the Asiarchs were excluded, attempted to regulate the expenditure between the mean parsimony of some, and the prodigality of others.† Those who voluntarily undertook the office of exhibiting games were likewise exempted from this sumptuary law, for there were still some ambitious of this kind of popularity. They were proud of purchasing, at this enormous price, the honour of seeing their names displayed on tablets to the wondering multitude[‡], and of being drawn in their chariots through the applauding city on the morning of the festival.

[§] The tribunus voluptatum appears as a title on a Christian tomb. Bosio, Roma Sotteranea, p. 106. Compare the observations of Bosio.

Throughout the empire, this passion prevailed in every city §, and in all classes. From early morning

* Cod. Theodos. xii. 1. 103. Compare the quotations from Libanius, in Godefroy's Commentary. There is a sumptuary law of Theodosius II. limiting the expenses: " Nec inconsulta plausorum insania curialium vires, fortunas civium, principalium domus, possessorum opes, reipublicæ robur evellant." The Alytarchs, Syriarchs, Asiarchs, and some others, are exempted from this Law. C. T. xv. 9. 2. In Italy, at a later period, the reign of Theodoric, the public games, were provided by the liberality of the Gothic sovereign: Beatitudo sit temporum lætitia populorum. Cassiodorus, epist. i. 20. The Epistles of Theodoric's minister are full of provisions and regulations for the celebration of the various kinds of games. Lib. i. epist. 20. 27. 30, 31, 32, 33., iii.51., iv. 37. Theodoric espoused the green faction; he supported the pantomime. There were still tribuni voluptatum at Rome, vi. 6. Stipends were allowed to scenici, ix.

† Symmachus, lib. x. epist. 28. 42. Compare Heyne, Opuscula, vi. p. 14.

‡ Basil, in Psal. 61. Prudent. Hamartigenia.

Muller names the following cities, besides the four great capi-tals, Rome, Constantinople, Antioch, and Alexandria, in which the games are alluded to by ancient authors, Gortyna, Nicomedia, Laodicea, Tyre, Berytus, Cæsarea, Heliopolis, Gaza, Ascalon, Jerusa-

BOOK IV. to late in the evening, the theatres were crowded in every part.* The artisan deserted his work, the merchant his shop, the slaves followed their masters, and were admitted into the vast circuit. Sometimes, when the precincts of the circus or amphitheatre were insufficient to contain the thronging multitudes, the adjacent hills were crowded with spectators, anxious to obtain a glimpse of the distant combatants, or to ascertain the colour of the victorious charioteer. The usages of the East and of the West differed as to the admission of women to these spectacles. In the East, they were excluded by the general sentiment from the theatre.† Nature itself, observes St. Chrysostom, enforces this prohibition.‡ It arose, not out of Christianity, but out of the manners of the East; it is alluded to not as a distinction, but as a general usage. § Chrysostom laments that women, though they did not attend the games, were agitated by the factions of the circus.|| In the West, the greater freedom of the Roman women had long asserted and still lem, Berea, Corinth, Cirta, Carthage, Syracuse, Catania, Milan, Aquileia, Ravenna, Mentz, Cologne, Treves, Arles. P. 53. Stωροῦσι. c. 22. Clemens Alex. Strom. lib. iii.

† Chrys. Hom. 12. in Coloss. vol. ii. p. 417.

§ Procop. de Bell. Pers. l. c. 42.

^{*} Augustine, indeed, asserts, "per omnes ferè civitates cadunt theatra caveæ turpitudinum, et publicæ professiones flagitiorum. De Cons. Evangelist. c. 51.

[†] There are one or two passages of the Fathers opposed to this opinion. Tatian says, τοῦς ὅπως δεῖ μοιχεύειν ἐπὶ τῆς σκήνης σοφιστεύοντας αι θυγάτερες ὅμων καὶ οι παίδες maintained this privilege. It is well known that CHAP. the vestal virgins had their seats of honour in the Roman spectacles, even those which might have been supposed most repulsive to feminine gentleness and delicacy; and the Christian preachers of the West remonstrate as strongly against the females as against the men, on account of their inextinguishable attachment to the public spectacles.

It was remarked as an extraordinary occurrence that, on the intelligence of the martyrdom of Gordius, matrons and virgins, forgetting their bashfulness, rushed to the theatre. Basil, vol. ii. p. 144.

The more austere and ascetic Christian teachers condemned alike all these popular spectacles. From the avowed connection with Paganism, as to the time of their celebration t, their connection with the worship of Pagan deities, according to the accredited notion that all these deities were dæmons permitted to delude mankind, the theatre was considered a kind of temple of the Evil Spirit.‡ There were some, however, who openly vindicated these public exhibitions, and alleged the chariot of Elijah, the dancing of David, and the quotations of St. Paul from dramatic writers, as cases in point.

These public spectacles were of four kinds, Fourkinds of spectacles.

* Quæ pudica forsitan ad spectaculum matrona processerat, de spectaculo revertitur impudica. Ad Donat. Compare Augustine, de Civ. Dei, ii. 4. Quid juvenes aut virgines faciant, cum hæc et fieri sine pudore, et spectari libenter ab omnibus cernunt, admonentur, quid facere possent, inflammantur libidines, ac se quisque pro sexu in illis imaginibus præfigurat, corruptiores ad cubicula revertuntur. Lact. Div. Instit. xv. 6. 31.

+ Dubium enim non est, quod lædunt Deum, utpote idolis consecratæ. Colitur namque et honoratur Minerva in gymnasiis, Venus in theatris, Neptunus in circis, Mars in arenis, Mercurius in palæstris. Salvian, lib. vi.

A fair collection of the denunciations of the Fathers against theatrical amusements may be found in Mamachi, de' Costumi de' Primitivi Cristiani, ii. p. 150. et seqq.

‡ See the book de Spect. attributed to St. Cyprian.

Manufa Manufak Mi independent of the common and more vulgar exhibitions, juggling, rope-dancing, and tumbling.*

1. The old gymnastic games. The Olympic sames survived in Greece till the invasion of Alaric, t Antioch likewise celebrated this quinquennial festivity; youths of station and rank exhiluted themselves as boxers and wrestlers. These games were also retained at Rome and in parts of Africal: it is uncertain whether they were introducal into Constantinople. The various passages ed Chrysistom which allude to them probably were ablivered in Antioch. Something of the old honour adhered to the wrestlers and performers in these games: they either were, or were supposed to be, of respectable station and unblemished character. The herald advanced into the midst of the arens and made his proclamation, "that any man should some forward who had any charge against any one of the men about to appear before them, as a thief, a slave, or of bad reputation." §

Tragerly and crussds.

- II. Theatrical exhibitions, properly so called. The higher tragedy and comedy were still represented on the inauguration of the consuls at Rome.
- * Compare the references to dancers, jugglers, &c. in Mont-Chrysostom's works on the rope faucon, Diatribe, p. 194.

† Liban. de Vocat. ad Festa Olympiæ.

Cuncta Palæmoniis manus explorata coronis Adsit, et Eleo pubes laudata tonanti.

Claudian, de Fl. Mal. Cons. 288.

This, however, may be poetic reminiscence. These exhibitions are described as conducted with greater decency and order (proably because they awoke less passionate interest) than those of the circus or theatre.

† They were restored in Africa, by a law of Gratian, A.D. 376. Cod. Theod. xv. 7. 3.

§ Compare Montfaucon's Diatribe, p. 194.

laudian names actors of the sock and buskin, e performers of genuine comedy and tragedy, as hibited on the occasion of the consulship of Malis. During the triumph of the Christian Emerors Theodosius and Arcadius, the theatre of ompey was filled by chosen actors from all parts the world. Two actors in tragedy and comedy † e named as standing in the same relation to each her as the famous Æsopus and the comic Ros-Prudentius speaks of the tragic mask as still use; and it appears that females acted those erts in Terence which were formerly represented men. ‡ The youthful mind of Augustine took elight in being agitated by the fictitious sorrows the stage. § Nor was this higher branch of the t extinct in the East: tragic and comic actors are amed, with other histrionic performers, in the ations of Chrysostom ||, and there are allusions in ibanius to mythological tragic fables and to the medies of Menander. ¶ But as these representions, after they had ceased to be integral parts of ie Pagan worship, were less eagerly denounced the Christian teachers , the comparatively

> * Qui pulpita socco Personat, aut altè graditur majore cothurno, In Cons. Mall. 313.

Pompeiana proscenia delectis actoribus personarent. Symmach. lib. x. ep. 29.

† Publius Pollio and Ambivius. mmach. epist. x. 2.

1 Donatus in Andriam, act. iv.

S Confess. iii. 2.

VOL. III.

 Lactantius inveighs with all the energy of the first ages against tragedy and comedy: — Tragicæ historiæ subjiciunt oculis patricidia et incesta regum malorum, et cois. v. ii. p. 403.; Hom. 6. in thurnata scelera demonstrant. Corre mot. i. 780., i. p. 38. i. 731. micæ de stupris virginum et am-dent in common life, extemporaneously dramatised CHAP. by the mime, ludicrous in its general character, mingled at times with sharp or even grave and sententious satire. Such were the mimes of Laberius, to which republican Rome had listened with delight. It was now the lowest kind of buffoonery. The mime, or several mimes, both male and female, appeared in ridiculous dresses, with shaven crowns, and pretending still to represent some kind of story, poured forth their witless obscenity, and indulged in all kinds of practical jokes and manual wit, blows on the face and broken heads. The music was probably the great charm, but that had become soft, effeminate, and lascivious. The female performers were of the most abandoned character*, and scenes were sometimes exhibited of the most abominable indecency, even if we do not give implicit credit to the malignant tales of Procopius concerning the exhibitions of the Empress Theodora, when she performed as a dancing girl in these disgusting mimes. †

¶ Liban. vol. ii. p. 375.

The Pantomime was a kind of ballet in action. ‡ Pantoγάρ γελοίων, καὶ οῖ κακῶς ἀπολούμενοι δρχησταὶ, καὶ πᾶν ὅ' τι πρὸς αἰσχρότητα καὶ τὴν ἄτοπον ταύτην καὶ έκμελη συντελεί μουσικήν, ήσκήθη τε ἐπὶ τούτου. Lib. iv. c. 33.

Many passages of Chrysostom might be quoted, in which he speaks of the naked courtesans, meaning probably with the most transparent clothing (though wo-men were exhibited at Antioch swimming in an actual state of nudity), who performed in these mimes. The more severe Christian preacher is confirmed by the language of the Heathen Zosimus, whose bitter hatred to Christianity induces him to attribute their most monstrous excesses to the reign of shaven crowns. the Christian Emperor. Μίμοι τε

[†] Muller, 92. 103. ‡ Libanius is indignant that men should attempt to confound the orchestæ or pantomimes with these degraded and infamous mimes. Vol. iii. p. 350. The pantomimes wore masks, the mimes had their faces uncovered, and usually had likewise represented by women* of whom there were no less than 3000 in Romet: and so important were these females considered to the public amusement, that, on the expulsion of all strangers from the city during a famine, an exception was made by the prætor, in deference to the popular wishes, in favour of this class alone. The profession. however, was considered infamous, and the indecency of their attire upon the public stage justified the low estimate of their moral character. Their attractions were so dangerous to the Roman youth, that a special law prohibited the abduction of these females from their public occupation, whether the enamoured lover withdrew one of them from the stage as a mistress, or, as not unfrequently happened, with the more honourable title of wife. ‡ The East, though it sometimes endured the appearance of women in those parts, often left them to be performed by boys, yet with any thing but advantage to general morality. The aversion of Christianity to the subjects exhibited by the pantomimes, almost invariably moulded up as they were with Paganism, as well as its high moral sense 'united, perhaps, with something of the disdain of ancient Rome for the histrionic art, which it patronised nevertheless with inexhaustible ardour). branded the performers with the deepest mark of public contempt. They were, as it were, public

^{*} Even in Constantinople, wonen acted in the pantomimes. Chrysostom, Hom. 6., in Thessaon., denounces the performance of Cod. Theodos. xv. 7. 5. Phædra and Hippolitus, by wo-

B00¥ 1V. slaves, and could not abandon their profession. They were considered unfit to mingle with respectable society; might not appear in the forum or basilica, or use the public baths; they were excluded even from the theatre as spectators, and might not be attended by a slave, with a folding-Even Christianity appeared stool for their use. to extend its mercies and its hopes to this devoted race with some degree of rigour and jealousy. The actor baptized in the apparent agony of death, if he should recover, could not be forced back upon the stage; but the guardian of the public amusements was to take care, lest, by pretended sickness, the actor should obtain this precious privilege of baptism, and thus exemption from his servitude. Even the daughters of actresses partook of their mothers' infamy, and could only escape being doomed to their course of life by the profession of Christianity, ratified by a certain term of probationary virtue. If the actress relapsed from Christianity, she was invariably condemned to her impure servitude. †

Such was the general state of the theatrical exhibitions in the Roman empire at that period. The higher drama, like every other intellectual and inventive art, had to undergo the influence of Christianity before it could revive in its splendid and prolific energy. In all European countries, the Christian mystery, as it was called, has been the parent of tragedy, perhaps of comedy. It reappeared † Cod. Theodos. de Scenicis, xv. 7. 2. 4. 8. 9.

^{*} Cod. Theodos. xv. 13. † Cod. Theodos.

as a purely religious representation, having retained no remembrance whatever of Paganism; and was at one period, perhaps, the most effective teacher. in times of general ignorance and total scarcity of books, both among priests and people, of Christian history as well as of Christian legend.

But at a later period, the old hereditary hostility of Christianity to the theatre has constantly revived. The passages of the Fathers have perpetually been repeated by the more severe preachers. whether fairly applicable or not to the dramatic entertainments of different periods; and in general it has had the effect of keeping the actor in a lower caste of society; a prejudice often productive of the evil which it professed to correct; for men whom the general sentiment considers of a low moral order will rarely make the vain attempt of raising themselves above it: if they cannot avoid contempt, they will care little whether they de-

III. The Amphitheatre, with its shows of gladi- Amphi-The suppression of those Gladiatoators and wild-beasts. bloody spectacles, in which human beings slaughtered each other by hundreds for the diversion of their fellow men, is one of the most unquestionable and proudest triumphs of Christianity. atorial shows, strictly speaking, that is, the mortal combats of men, were never introduced into the less warlike East, though the combats of men with wildbeasts were exhibited in Syria and other parts. They were Roman in their origin, and to their termination. It might seem that the pride of Roman conquest serve it.

BOOK was not satisfied with the execution of her desolating mandates, unless the whole city witnessed the bloodshed of her foreign captives; and in her decline she seemed to console herself with these sanguinary proofs of her still extensive empire: the ferocity survived the valour of her martial spirit. Barbarian life seemed, indeed, to be of no account, but to contribute to the sports of the The humane Symmachus, even at this late period •, reproves the impiety of some Saxon captives, who, by strangling themselves in prison, escaped the ignominy of this public exhibition. It is an humiliating consideration to find how little Roman civilisation had tended to mitigate the ferocity of manners and of temperament. Not merely did women crowd the amphitheatre during the combats of these fierce and almost naked savages or criminals, but it was the especial privilege of the vestal virgin, even at this late period, to give the signal for the mortal blow, to watch the sword driven deeper into the palpitating entrails. The state of uncontrolled frenzy worked up even the most sober

> * Quando prohibuisset privatâ custodià desperatæ gentis impias manus, cum viginti novem fractas sine laqueo fauces primus ludi gladiatorii dies viderit. Symmach. lib. ii. epist. 46. † It is curious that at one time the exposure to wild beasts was considered a more ignominious punishment than fighting as a gladiator. The slave was condemned to the former for kidnapping; the freeman to the latter. Codex Theod. iv. 18. 1.

Virgo - consurgit ad ictus, Et quotiens victor ferrum jugulo inserit, illa Delicias ait esse suas, pectusque jacentis Virgo modesta jubet, converso pollice, rumpi; Ni lateat pars ulla animæ vitalibus imis, Altiùs impresso dum palpitat ense secutor. Prudent, adv. Sym. ii. 1095.

The manner in which this contagious assion for bloodshed engrossed the whole soul is escribed with singular power and truth by St. Au-A Christian student of the law was comustine. elled by the importunity of his friends to enter he amphitheatre. He sate with his eyes closed, nd his mind totally abstracted from the scene. He ras suddenly startled from his trance by a tremenlous shout from the whole audience. He opened is eyes, he could not but gaze on the spectacle. Directly he beheld the blood, his heart imbibed he common ferocity; he could not turn away; nis eyes were riveted on the arena; and the inteest, the excitement, the pleasure, grew into complete intoxication. He looked on, he shouted he was inflamed; he carried away from the amphi-:heatre an irresistible propensity to return to its cruel enjoyments.*

Christianity began to assail this deep-rooted passion of the Roman world with caution, almost with timidity. Christian Constantinople was never defiled with the blood of gladiators. In the same year as that of the Council of Nice, a local edict was issued, declaring the Emperor's disapprobation of these sanguinary exhibitions in time of peace, and prohibiting the volunteering of men as gladiators.† This was a considerable step, if we call to mind the careless apathy with which Constantine, before his conversion, had exhibited all his barbarian captives in the amphitheatre at Treves. ‡

^{*} August. Conf. vi. 8.

[†] See vol. ii. p. 355.

[†] Codex Theodos. xv. 12. 1.

Book IV. This edict, however, addressed to the prefect of Phœnicia, had no permanent effect, for Libanius several years after, boasts that he had not been a spectator of the gladiatorial shows still regularly celebrated in Syria. Constantius prohibited soldiers, and those in the imperial service (Palatini), from hiring themselves out to the Lanistee, the keepers of gladiators.* Valentinian decreed that no Christian or Palatine should be condemned for any crime whatsoever to the arena. † An early edict of Honorius prohibited any slave who had been a gladiator ‡ from being admitted into the service of a man of senatorial dignity. But Christianity now began to speak in a more courageous and commanding tone. § The Christian poet urges on the Christian Emperor the direct prohibition of these inhuman and disgraceful exhibitions ||: but a single act often affects the public mind much more strongly than even the most eloquent and reiterated exhortation. An Eastern monk, named Telemachus, travelled all the way to Rome, in order to protest against those disgraceful barbari-In his noble enthusiasm, he leaped into the arena to separate the combatants; either with the sanction of the prefect, or that of the infuriated

Arripe dilatam tua, dux, in tempora famam,
Quodque patri superest, successor laudis habeto.
Ille urbem vetuit taurorum sanguine tingi,
Tu mortes miserorum hominum prohibete litari:
Nullus in urbe cadat, cujus sit pæna voluptas,
Nec sua virginitas oblectet cædibus ora.
Jam solis contenta feris infamis arena,
Nulla cruentatis homicidia ludat in armis.
Prudent. adv. Symm. ii. 1121.

mbly, he was torn to pieces, the martyr of CHAP. istian humanity.* The impression of this awful, ie, of a Christian, a monk, thus murdered he arena, was so profound, that Honorius issued ohibitory edict, putting an end to these bloody ws. This edict, however, only suppressed the tal combats of ment; the less inhuman, though brutalising, conflicts of men with wild-beasts ns scarcely to have been abolished‡ till the inution of wealth, and the gradual contraction the limits of the empire, cut off both the supply the means of purchasing these costly luxuries. revolted or conquered provinces of the South, East, and the North, no longer rendered up their ustomed tribute of lions from Libya, leopards n the East, dogs of remarkable ferocity from tland, of crocodiles and bears, and every kind vild and rare animal. The Emperor Anthemius hibited the lamentable spectacles of wild-beasts the Sunday; and Salvian still inveighs against se bloody exhibitions. And this amusement dually degenerated, if the word may be used,

Theodoret, v. 26. The law of Honorius is not it in the Theodosian code, n only retains those of Conine and Constantius. For reason, doubts have been vn on the authority of Theo-; but there is no recorded ace of gladiatorial combats nce of gladiatorial combats spicientium voluptate. en man and man since this Dei, lib. vi. p. 51.

period. The passage of Salvian, sometimes alleged, refers to combats with wild-beasts. - Ubi summum deliciarum genus est mori homines, aut quod est mori graviùs acerbiùsque, lacerari, expleri ferarum alvos humanis carnibus, comedi homines cum circumstantium lætitiå, con-De Gub.

¹ Quicquid monstriferis nutrit Gætulia campis, Alpina quicquid tegitur nive, Gallica quicquid Silva timet, jaceat. Largo ditescat arena Sanguine, consumant totos spectacula montes. Claud. in Cons. Mall. 306.

BOOK

not so much from the improving humanity, as from the pusillanimity of the people. Arts were introduced to irritate the fury of the beast, without endangering the person of the combatant, which would have been contemptuously exploded in the more warlike days of the Empire. It became a mere exhibition of skill and agility. The beasts were sometimes tamed before they were exhibited. In the West, those games seem to have sunk with the Western empire"; in the East, they lingered on so as to require a special prohibition by the Council of Trulla at Constantinople, at the close of the seventh century.

The circus. Chariot races.

IV. The chariot race of the circus. If these former exhibitions were prejudicial to the modesty and humanity of the Roman people, the chariot races were no less fatal to their peace. This frenzy did not, indeed, reach its height till the middle of the fifth century, when the animosities of political and religious difference were outdone by factions enlisted in favour of the rival charioteers in the circus. As complete a separation took place in society; adverse parties were banded against each other in as fierce opposition; an insurrection as destructive and sanguinary took place; the throne of the Emperor was as fearfully shaken, in the collision of the blue and green factions, as ever took place in defence of the sacred rights of liberty or of faith. tinople seemed to concentre on the circus all that absorbing interest, which at Rome was divided by many spectacles. The Christian city seemed to compensate itself for the excitement of those games which were prohibited by the religion, by the fury with which it embraced those which were allowed, or rather against which Christianity remonstrated in vain. Her milder tone of persuasiveness, and her more authoritative interdiction. were equally disregarded, where the sovereign and the whole people yielded to the common frenzy. But this consolation remained to Christianity, that when it was accused of distracting the imperial city with religious dissension, it might allege, that this at least was a nobler subject of difference; or rather. that the passions of men seized upon religious distinctions with no greater eagerness than they did on these competitions for the success of a chariot driver, in a blue or a green jacket, in order to gratify their inextinguishable love of strife and animosity.

* Agincourt, Histoire de l'Art, is of opinion that Theodoric substituted military games for theatrical shows, and that these military Cassiod. Epist. v. 42.

CHAP. II. BOOK IV.

CHAP. III.

CHRISTIAN LITERATURE.

CHRISTIANITY was extensively propagated in an age in which Greek and Latin literature had false into hopeless degeneracy; nor could even its spirit awaken the dead. Both these languages had already attained and passed their full developement; they had fulfilled their part in the imaginative and intellectual advancement of mankind; and it seems, in general, as much beyond the power of the genius of a country, as of an individual, to renew its youth. It was not till it had created new languages, or rather till languages had been formed in which the religious notions of Christianity were an elementary and constituent part, that Christian literature assumed its free and natural dignity.

The genius of the new religion never coalesced in perfect and amicable harmony with either the Greek or the Latin tongue. In each case it was a foreign dialect introduced into a fully-formed and completely organised language. The Greek, notwithstanding its exquisite pliancy, with difficulty accommodated itself to the new sentiments and opinions. It had either to endure the naturalisation of new words, or to deflect its own terms to new significations. In the latter case, the doctrines were endangered, in the former, the purity of the language, more especially since the Oriental writers were in general alien to the Grecian mind. The Greek lan-lage had indeed long before yielded to the conta- CHAP. inating influences of Barbarism. From Homer to emosthenes, it had varied in its style and character, Degeneit had maintained its admirable perfection, as the racy. iest, the clearest, and most versatile instrument Greek lipoetry, oratory, or philosophy. But the con- and lanlests of Greece were as fatal to her language as to er liberties. The Macedonian, the language of e conquerors, was not the purest Greek*, and in eneral, by the extension over a wider surface, the ream contracted a taint from every soil over which flowed. Alexandria was probably the best school 'foreign Grecian style, at least in literature; in ria it had always been infected in some degree by e admixture of Oriental terms. The Hellenistic yle, as it has been called, of the New Testament, ay be considered a fair example of the language, it was spoken in the provinces among persons of) high degree of intellectual culture.

The Latin seemed no less to have fulfilled its Of Roman. ission, and to have passed its culminating point, the verse of Virgil and the prose of Cicero. Its ern and masculine majesty, its plain and practical gour, seemed as if it could not outlive the reublican institutions, in the intellectual conflicts of hich it had been formed. The impulse of the old eedom carried it through the reign of Augustus, ut no further; and it had undergone rapid and rogressive deterioration before it was called upon discharge its second office of desseminating and reserving the Christianity of the West; and the

* Compare the dissertation of Valpy's edition of Stephens' The-zurz on the Macedonian dialect, printed in the prolegomena to guage.

with the prolix and elaborate, if more correct, periods of Libanius, without acknowledging that a new principle of vitality has been infused into the language.

But in fact the ecclesiastical Greek and Latin are new dialects of the ancient tongue. literature stands entirely apart from that of Greece or Rome. The Greek already possessed the foundation of this literature in the Septuagint version of the Old, and in the original of the New Testament. The Vulgate of Jerome, which almost immediately superseded the older imperfect or inaccurate versions from the Greek, supplied the same groundwork to Latin Christendom. There is something singularly rich and, if we may so speak, picturesque in the Latin of the Vulgate; the Orientalism of the Scripture is blended up with such curious felicity with the idiom of the Latin, that, although far removed either from the colloquial language of the comedians, or the purity of Cicero, it both delights the ear and fills the mind. It is an original and somewhat foreign, but likewise an expressive and harmonious dialect.* It has no doubt powerfully influenced the religious style, not merely of the later Latin writers, but those of the modern languages of which Latin is the parent. Constantly quoted,

* There appears to me more of the Oriental character in the Old Testament of the Vulgate than in the LXX. That translation having turnal flagellation for his attachbeen made by Greeks, or by Jews ment to profane literature rests domiciled in a Greek city, the (as we have seen) on his own au-Hebrew style seems subdued, as thority; but his later works show far as possible, to the Greek. Je-rome seems to have endeavoured effectively scourged out of him.

to Hebraise or Orientalise his Latin.

BOOK

either in its express words, or in terms approaching closely to its own, it contributed to form the dialect of exclesiastical Latin, which became the religious language of Europe; and as soon as religion condessended to employ the modern languages in its service, was transfused as a necessary and integral part of that which related to religion. Christian licerature was as yet purely religious in its scope; though it ranged over the whole field of ancient pactry, philosophy, and history, its sole object was the illustration or confirmation of Christian opinion.

For many ages, and indeed as long as it spoke the ancient languages, it was barren of poetry in all its loftier departments, at least of that which was poetry in form as well as in spirit.

The religion itself was the poetry of Christianity. The sacred books were to the Christians what the national epic, and the sacred lyric had been to the other races of antiquity. They occupied the place, and proscribed in their superior sanctity, or defied by their unattainable excellence, all The Church succeeded to the splendid inheritance of the Hebrew temple and synagogue. The Psalms and the Prophets, if they departed somewhat from their original simple energy and grandeur in the uncongenial and too polished languages of the Greeks and Romans, still, in their magery, their bold impersonations, the power and najesty of their manner, as well as in the subimity of the notions of divine power and wisdom. with which they were instinct, stood alone in the religious poetry of mankind.

The religious books of Christianity, though of a CHAP. gentler cast, and only in a few short passages (and in the grand poetic drama of the Revelations) Sacred poetical in their form, had much, especially in their narratives, of the essence of poetry; the power of awakening kindred emotions; the pure simplicity of truth, blended with imagery and with language, which kindled the fancy. Faith itself was constantly summoning the imagination to its aid, to realise, to impersonate those scenes which were described in the sacred volume, and which it was thus enabled to embrace with greater fervour and sincerity. All the other early Christian poetry was pale and lifeless in comparison with that of the sacred writers. Some few hymns, as the noble Te Deum ascribed to Ambrose, were admitted, with the Psalms, and the short lyric passages in the New Testament, the Magnificat, the Nunc Dimittis, and the Alleluia, into the services of the Church. But the sacred volume commanded exclusive adoration not merely by its sanctity, but by its unrivalled imagery and sweetness. Each sect had its hymns; and those of the Gnostics, with the rival strains of the orthodox churches of Syria, attained great popularity. But in general these compositions were only a feebler echo of the strong and vivid sounds of the Hebrew psalms. The epic and tragic form into which, in the time of Julian, the scripture narratives were cast, in order to provide a Christian Homer and Euripides for those schools in which the originals were interdicted, were probably but cold paraphrases, the Hebrew poetry

There is more of the essence of poetry in the simpler and unadorned Acts of the Martyrs, more, at that period of the world by reading the works of Claudian. His panegyric and his satire preserve the same religious impartiality; award their most lavish praise or their bitterest invective on Christian or Pagan: he insults the fall of Eugenius, and glories in the victories of Theodosius. Under his child, - and Honorius never became more than a child,— Christianity continued to inflict wounds more and more deadly on expiring Paganism. Are the gods of Olympus agitated with apprehension at the birth of their new enemy? They are introduced as rejoicing at his appearance, and this Christian prince. The promising long years of glory. noble lines, as well as compared the whole prophetic choir of illustrations of the times:—

Paganism, all the oracles throughout the world, are summoned to predict the felicity of his reign. His birth is compared to that of Apollo, but the narrow limits of an island must not confine the new deity

Non littora nostro Sufficerent angusta Deo.

Augury, and divination, the shrines of Ammon and of Delphi, the Persian magi, the Etruscan seers, the Chaldean astrologers, the Sibyl herself, are described as still discharging their poetic functions, and celebrating the natal day of this Christian prince. They are noble lines, as well as curious Quæ tunc documenta futuri? Quæ voces avium? quanti per inane volatus? Quis vatum discursus erat? Tibi corniger Ammon, Et dudum taciti rupére silentia Delphi. Te Persæ cecinêre Magi, te sensit Étruscus Augur, et inspectis Babylonius horruit astris: Chaldæi stupuêre senes, Cumanaque rursus Intonuit rupes, rabidæ delubra Sibyllæ.

Note on Gibbon, v. 249.

But Roman poetry expired with Claudian. In the vast mass of the Christian Latin poetry of this period, independent of the perpetual faults against metre and taste, it is impossible not to acknowledge that the subject matter appears foreign, and irreconcileable with the style of the verse. Christian images and sentiments, the frequent biblical phrases and expressions, are not yet naturalised; and it is almost impossible to select any passage of considerable length from the whole cycle, which can be offered as poetry. I except a few of the hymns, and even, as to the hymns (setting aside the Te Deum), parodoxical as it may sound, I cannot but think the later and more barbarous the best. is nothing in my judgment to be compared with the monkish "Dies iræ, Dies illa," or even the

" Stabat Mater."

I am inclined to select, as a favourable specimen of Latin poetry, the following almost unknown lines (they are not in the earlier editions of Dracontius). three reasons for my selection:
1. The real merit of the verses compared to most of the Christian poetry; 2. Their opposition to the BOOK IV. pathos, occasionally more grandeur, more touching incident and expression, and even, we may ven-prevailing tenet of celibacy, for which cause they are quoted by Theiner; 3. The interest which countrymen of Milton.

Tunc oculos per cuncta jacit, miratur amænum Sic florere locum, sic puros fontibus amnes, Quatuor undisonas stringenti gurgite ripas, Ire per arboreos saltus, camposque virentes Miratur; sed quid sit homo, quos factus ad usus Scire cupit simplex, et non habet, unde requirat; Quo merito sibimet data sit possessio mundi, Et domus alma nemus per florea regna paratum : Ac procul expectat virides jumenta per agros ; Et de se tacitus, quæ sint hæc cuncta, requirit, Et quare secum non sint hæc ipsa, volutat: Nam consorte carens, cum quo conferret, egebat. Viderat Omnipotens, hæc illum corde moventem, Et miseratus ait : Demus adjutoria facto; Participem generis: tanquam si diceret auctor. Non solum decet esse virum, consortia blanda Noverit, uxor crit, quum sit tamen ille maritus, Conjugium se quisque vocet, dulcedo recurrat Cordibus innocuis, et sit sibi pignus uterque Velle pares, et nolle pares, stans una voluntas, Par animi concors, paribus concurrere votis. Ambo sibi requies cordis sint, ambo fideles. Et quicunque datur casus, sit causa duorum. Nec mora, jam venit alma quies, oculosque supinat Somnus, et in dulcem solvuntur membra soporem. Sed quum jure Deus, nullo prohibente valeret Demere particulam, de quo plus ipse pararat, Ne vi oblata daret juveni sua costa dolorem, Redderet et tristem subitò, quem lædere nollet, Fur opifex vult esse suus ; nam posset et illam Pulvere de simili princeps formare puellam. Sed quo plenus amor toto de corde veniret, Noscere in uxore voluit sua membra maritum, Dividitur contexta cutis, subducitur una Sensim costa viro, sed mox reditura marito. Nam juvenis de parte brevi formatur adulta Virgo, decora, rudis, matura tumentibus annis, Conjugii, sobolisque capax, quibus apta probatur, Et sine lacte pio crescit infantia pubes.

Excutitur somno juvenis, videt ipse puellam Ante oculos astare suos, pater, inde maritus. Non tamen ex costà genitor, sed conjugis auctor. Somnus erat partus, conceptus semine nullo.

to say, happier invention than in the prolix CHAP. inanimate strains of the Christian poet. the awakened imagination was not content h feasting in silence on its lawful nutriment, the try of the Bible; it demanded and received petual stimulants, which increased, instead of sfying, the appetite. That peculiar state of the nan mind had now commenced, in which the gination so far predominates over the other ilties, that truth cannot help arraying itself in garb of fiction; credulity courts fiction, and on believes its own fables. That some of the Legends. istian legends were deliberate forgeries can Materiem sopita quies produxit amoris, Affectusque novos blandi genuêre sopores. Constitit ante oculos nullo velamine tecta, Corpore nuda simul niveo, quasi nympha profundi, Cæsaries intonsa comis, gena pulchra rubore, Omnia pulchra gerens, oculos, os, colla, manusque, Vel qualem possent digiti formare Tonantis.

Nescia mens illis, fieri quæ causa fuisset; Tunc Deus et princeps ambos, conjunxit in unum Et remeat sua costa viro; sua membra recepit; Accipit et fænus, quum non sit debitor ullus. His datur omnis humus, et quicquid jussa creavit, Aëris et pelagi fœtus, elementa duorum, Arbitrio commissa manent. His, crescite, dixit Omnipotens, replete solum de semine vestro, Sanguinis ingeniti natos nutrite nepotes, Et de prole novos iterum copulate jugales. Et dum terra fretum, dum cœlum sublevat aër, Dum solis micat axe jubar, dum luna tenebras Dissipat, et puro lucent mea sidera cœlo; Sumere, quicquid habent pomaria nostra licebit; Nam totum quod terra creat, quod pontus et aër Protulit, addictum vestro sub jure manebit, Deliciæque fluent vobis, et honesta voluptas; Arboris unius tantum nescite saporem.

acontii Presbyt. Hispani 1791. Carmen de Deo, lib. i. v. st. secul. v. sub Theodos. M. 348.415. ina, à F. Arevalo. Romæ, uestioned; the principle of pious frai justify this mode of working on mind; it was admitted and avowed. surve into Christianity was so valuable a service hallow deceit itself. But the largest portion probably the natural birth of that imaginative excitement which quickens its day-dreams mightly visions into reality. The Christian lived a supernatural world; the notion of the divine power, the perpetual interference of the Deity, the agency of the countless invisible beings which hovered over mankind, was so strongly impressed upon the belief, that every extraordinary, and almost every ordinary incident became a miracle, every inward emotion a suggestion either of a good or an evil spirit. A mythic period was thus gradually formed, in which reality melted into fable, and invention unconsciously trespassed on the province of history. This invention had very early let itself loose, in the spurious gospels, or accounts of the lives of the Saviour and his Apostles, which were chiefly, we conceive, composed among, or rather against, the sects which were less scrupulous in their veneration for the sacred books. Unless Antidocetic, it is difficult to imagine any serious object in fictions, in general so fantastic and puerile.* example had been set by some, probably, of the foreign Jews, whose apocryphal books were as numerous and as wild as those of the Christian sectaries. The Jews had likewise anticipated them in the inter-

Sparenas Gospola

^{} Compare what has been said observe that the antiquity of this on the Gospel of the Infancy, vol.i. page 133.; though I would now polation or fabrication of the Sibylline verses. The CHAP. fourth book of Esdras, the Shepherd of Hermas, and other prophetic works, grew out of the Prophets and the book of Revelations, as the Gospels of Nicodemus, and that of the Infancy, and the various spurious acts of the different Apostles, out of the Gospels and Acts. The Recognitions and other tracts which are called the Clementina, partake more of the nature of religious romance. Many of the former were obviously intended to pass for genuine records, and must be proscribed as unwarrantable fictions: the latter may rather have been designed to trace, and so to awaken religious feelings, than as altogether real history. The Lives of St. Anthony by Lives of Athanasius and of Hilarion by Jerome are the prototypes of the countless biographies of saints; and with a strong outline of truth, became impersonations of the feelings, the opinions, the belief of the time. We have no reason to doubt that the

* Compare the Codex Apocryphus Novi Testamenti, by J. A. Fabricius, and Jones on the Canon. A more elaborate collection of these curious documents has been commenced (I trust not abandoned) by Dr. Thilo, Lipsiæ, 1832. Of these, by far the most remarkable in its composition and its influence, was the Gospel of Nicodemus. The author of this work was a poet, and of no mean invention. The latter part, which describes the descent of the Saviour to hell, to deliver "the spirits in prison" (according to the hint in the epistle of St. Peter (1 Peter, iii. 19.), is extremely striking and dramatic. This "harrowing of hell," as it is called in the old mysteries, became a favourite topic of Christian legend, founded on, and tending greatly to establish the popular belief in, a purgatory, and to open, as it were, to the fears of man, the terrors of the penal state. With regard to these spurious gospels in general, it is a curious question in what manner, so little noticed as they are in the higher Christian literature, they should have reached down, and so completely incorporated themselves, in the dark ages, with the superstitions of the vulgar. They would never have furnished so many subjects to paint-ing, if they had not been objects of popular belief.

lous, but of that which it would have been con- CHAP. sidered impiety to disbelieve, even if they had the mclination.

The larger part of Christian literature consists in controversial writings, valuable to posterity as records of the progress of the human mind, and of she gradual developement of Christian opinions; at dimes worthy of admiration for the force, the copiousness, and the subtlety of argument; but too Aten repulsive from their solemn prolixity on inignificant subjects, and above all, the fierce, the injust, and the acrimonious spirit with which they treat their adversaries. The Christian literature in prose (excluding the history and hagiography), may be distributed under five heads: — I. Apologies, or defences of the Faith, against Jewish, or more frequently Heathen adversaries. II. Hermeneutics, or commentaries on the sacred writings. III. Expositions of the principles and doctrines of the Faith. IV. Polemical works against the different sects and heresies. V. Orations.

E. H. viii. 2., the honesty and impartiality of Eusebius, which was not above suspicion in his own day (Tillemont, M. E. tom.i. part i. p. 67.), has been severely questioned. Gibbon's observations on the subject gave rise to many dissertations. Muller, de Fide Euseb. Cæs. Havniæ, 1813. Danzius, de Euseb. Cæs. H. E. Scriptore, ejusque Fide Historica rectè æstimanda. Jenæ, 1815. Kestner, Comment. de Euseb. H.E. Conditoris Auctoritate et Fide. See also Reuterdahl, de Fontibus H. E. Eusebianæ. Lond. Goth. 1826, and various passages in the Excursus of Heinichen.

In many passages it is clear that Eusebius did not adhere to his own rule of partiality. His Ecclesiastical History, though probably highly coloured in many parts, is by no means an uniform panegyric on the early Christians. Strict impartiality could not be expected from a Christian writer of that day; and probably Eusebius erred more often from credulity than from dishonesty. Yet the unbelief produced, in later times, by the fictitious character of early Christian History, may show how dangerous, how fatal, may be the least departure from truth.

BOOK 1V.

I. We have already traced the manner in which the apology for Christianity, from humbly defensive became vigorously aggressive. The calm appeal to justice and humanity, the earnest deprecation of the odious calumnies with which they were charged, the plea for toleration, gradually rise to the vehement and uncompromising proscription of the folly and guilt of idolatry. Tertullian marks, as it were, the period of transition, though his fiery temper may perhaps have anticipated the time when Christianity, in the consciousness of strength, instead of endeavouring to appease or avert the wrath of hostile Paganism, might defy it to deadly strife. The earliest extant apology, that of Justin Martyr, is by no means severe in argument, nor vigorous in style, and though not altogether abstaining from recrimination, is still rather humble and deprecatory in its tone. The short apologetic orations — as the Christians had to encounter not merely the general hostility of the government or the people, but direct and argumentative treatises, written against them by the philosophic partygradually swelled into books. The first of these is perhaps the best, that of Origen against Celsus. The intellect of Origen, notwithstanding its occasional fantastic aberrations, appears to us more suited to grapple with this lofty argument than the diffuse and excursive Eusebius, whose evangelic Preparation and Demonstration heaped together vast masses of curious but by no means convincing learning, and the feebler and less candid Cyril, in his Books against Julian. We have already noticed the great work which perhaps might be best arranged under this head, the "City of God" of St. Augustine; but there was one short treatise which may vindicate the Christian Latin literature from the charge of barbarism: perhaps no late work, either Pagan or Christian, reminds us of the golden days of Latin prose so much as the Octavius of Minucius Felix.

II. The Hermeneutics, or the interpretation of Hermeneuthe sacred writers, might be expected to have more tics. real value and authority than can be awarded them by sober and dispassionate judgment. But it cannot be denied that almost all these writers, including those of highest name, are fanciful in their inferences, discover mysteries in the plainest sentences, wander away from the clear historical, moral, or religious meaning, into a long train of corollaries, at which we arrive we know not how. Piety, in fact. read in the Scripture, whatever it chose to read, and the devotional feeling it excited was at once the end and the test of the biblical commentary. the character of the age and the school in which the Christian teachers were trained, must here, as in other cases, be taken into account. sober Jewish system of interpretation (setting aside the wild cabalistic notions of the significance of letters, the frequency of their recurrence, their collocation, and all those wild theories which were engendered by a servile veneration of the very form and language of the sacred writings) allowed itself at least an equal latitude of authoritative inference. The Platonists spun out the thoughts or axioms of aries; it was the immediate contact of mind with mind, the direct influence of the Christian clergy, and even the more pious of the laity, which were tranquilly and noiselessly pursuing their course of conversion.*

These treatises, however, were principally addressed to the clergy, and through them worked downward into the mass of the Christian people: even with the more rapid and frequent communication which took place in the Christian world, they were but partially and imperfectly disseminated; but that which became another considerable and important part of their literature, their oratory, had in the first instance been directly addressed to the popular mind, and formed the chief part of the popular instruction. Christian preaching had opened a new field for eloquence.

V. Oratory, that oratory at least which communi- Christian cates its own impulses and passions to the heart, oratory. which not merely persuades the reason, but sways the whole soul of man, had suffered a long and total silence. It had every where expired with the republican institutions. The discussions in the senate had been controlled by the imperial presence; and another and a very interesting branch of the prose Christian literature, the epistolary. The letters of the great writers form The one of the most valuable parts of their works. The Latin Fathers, however, maintain that superiority over the Greek, which in classical times is asserted by Cicero and Pliny. The letters of Cyprian and Ambrose are of the highest

* I might perhaps have made interest as historical documents; those of Jerome, for manners; those of Augustine, perhaps for style. They far surpass those of Chrysostom, which we must, however, recollect were written from his dreary and monotonous place of exile. Yet Chrysostom's are superior to that dullest of all collections, the huge folio of the letters of Libanius.

BOOK 1V. even if the Roman senators had asserted the fullet freedom of speech, and allowed themselves the most exciting fervour of language, this was but one assembly in a single city, formed out of a confined aristocracy. The municipal assemblies were alike rebuked by the awe of a presiding master, the provincial governor, and of course afforded a less open field for stirring and general eloquence. The perfection of jurisprudence had probably been equally fatal to judicial oratory; we hear of great lawyers, but not of distinguished advocates. The highest flight of Pagan oratory which remains is in the adulatory panegyrics of the Emperors, pronounced by rival candidates for favour. Rhetoric was taught, indeed, and practised as a liberal, but it had sunk into a mere, art: it was taught by salaried professors in all the great towns to the higher youth; but they were mere exercises of fluent diction, on trite or obsolete subjects, the characters of the heroes of the Iliad, or some subtle question of morality.* It is impossible to conceive a more sudden and total change than from the school of the rhetorician to a crowded Christian church. The orator suddenly emerged from a listless audience of brother scholars, before whom he had discussed some one of those trivial questions according to formal rules, and whose ear could require no more than terseness or elegance of diction, and a just distribution of the argument: emotion was neither expected nor could be excited.

^{*}The declamations of Quintilian both of the subjects and the style are no doubt favourable specimens of these orators.

found himself among a breathless and anxious CHAP. multitude, whose eternal destiny might seem to hang on his lips, catching up and treasuring his words as those of divine inspiration, and interrupting his more eloquent passages by almost involuntary acclamations.* The orator, in the best days of Athens, the tribune, in the most turbulent periods of Rome, had not such complete hold upon the minds of his hearers; and—but that the sublime nature of his subject usually lay above the sphere of immediate action, but that, the purer and loftier its tone, if it found instantaneous sympathy, yet it also met the constant inert resistance of prejudice, and ignorance, and vice to its authority,—the power with which this privilege of oratory would have invested the clergy would have been far greater than that of any of the former political or sacerdotal dominations. Wherever the oratory of the pulpit coincided with human passion, it was irresistible, and sometimes when it resolutely encountered it, it might extort an unwilling triumph: when it appealed to faction, to ferocity, to sectarian animosity, it swept away its audience like a torrent, to any violence or madness at which it aimed; when to virtue, to piety, to peace, it at times subdued the most refractory, and received rewarded the more eloquent and successful teachers of rhetoric. Themistius speaks of the ἐκδοήσεις works are full of allusions to these τε καὶ κρότους, οίων θαμὰ ἀπολαύουσι acclamations.

These acclamations sometimes παρ' ὑμῶν οἱ δαιμόνιοι σοφισταί. Bathe homage of devout obedience.

VOL. III.

BOOK

The bishop in general, at least when the hierarchical power became more dominant, reserved for himself an office so productive of influence and so liable to abuse.* But men like Athanasius or Augustine were not compelled to wait for that qualification of rank. They received the ready permission of the bishop to exercise at once this important function. In general, a promising orator would rarely want opportunity of distinction; and he who had obtained celebrity would frequently be raised by general acclamation, or by a just appreciation of his usefulness by the higher clergy, to an episcopal throne.

But it is difficult to conceive the general effect produced by this devotion of oratory to its new From this time, instead of seizing casual office. opportunities of working on the mind and heart of man, it was constantly, regularly, in every part of to address the people in the absence of the clergy. It was ob-jected to the Bishop Demetrius, that he had permitted an unprecedented innovation in the case of Origen: he had allowed a layman to teach when the bishop was present. Euseb. E. H. vi. 19. 'O διδάσκων, εί και λαϊκός ή, ξμπειρος δέ τοῦ λόγου, καὶ τὸν τρόπον σεμνός, διδασκέτω. Constit. Apost. viii. 32. Laicus, præsentibus clericis, nisi illis jubentibus, docere non audeat. Conc. Carth. can. 98. Jerome might be supposed, in his indignant remon-strance against the right which almost all assumed of interpreting the Scriptures, to be writing of later

* The laity were long permitted days. Quod medicorum est, promittunt medici, tractant fabrilia fabri. Sola Scripturorum ars est, quam sibi omnes passim vindicant. Scribimus, indocti doctique poëmata passim. Hanc garrula anus, hanc delirus senex, hanc sophista ver-bosus, hanc universi præsumunt, lacerant, docent entequem discent.

Alii addicto supercilio, grandia verba trutinantes, inter mulierculas de sacris literis philosophantur.
Alii discunt, proh pudor! à feminis, quod viros doceant: et ne parum hoc sit quadam facilitate verborum, imò audacià, edisserunt aliis quod ipsi non intelliguat. Epist. l. ad Paulinum, vol. iv. p.

the empire, with more or less energy, with greater or less commanding authority, urging the doctrines of Christianity on awe-struck and submissive hearers. It had, of course, as it always has had, its periods of more than usual excitement, its sudden paroxysms of power, by which it convulsed some part of society. The constancy and regularity with which, in the ordinary course of things, it discharged its function, may in some degree have deadened its influence; and, in the period of ignorance and barbarism, the instruction was chiefly through the ceremonial, the symbolic worship, the painting, and even the dramatic representation.

Still, this new moral power, though intermitted at times, and even suspended, was almost continually operating, in its great and sustained energy, throughout the Christian world; though of course strongly tempered with the dominant spirit of Christianity, and, excepting in those periods either ripe for or preparing some great change in religious sentiment or opinion, the living and general expression of the prevalent Christianity, it was always in greater or less activity, instilling the broader principles of Christian faith and morals; if superstitious, rarely altogether silent; if appealing to passions which ought to have been rebuked before its voice, and exciting those feelings of hostility between conflicting sects which it should have allayed, - yet even then in some hearts its gentler and more Christian tones made a profound and salutary impression, while its more violent language fell off without mingling with the uncongenial feelings. The great principles of the religion,-the providence of God, the redemption by Christ, the immortality of the soul, future retribution,-gleamed through all the fantastic and legendary lore with which it was encumbered and obscured in the darker ages. Christianity first imposed it as a duty on one class of men to be constantly enforcing moral and religious truth on all mankind. Though that duty, of course, was discharged with very different energy, judgment, and success, at different periods, it was always a strong counteracting power, an authorised, and in general respected, remonstrance against the vices and misery of mankind. Man was perpetually reminded that he was an immortal being under the protection of a wise and all-ruling Providence, and destined for a higher state of existence.

CHAP.

IV.

Nor was this influence only immediate and temporary: Christian oratory did not cease to speak when its echoes had died away upon the ear, and its expressions faded from the hearts of those to whom it was addressed. The orations of the Basils and Chrysostoms, the Ambroses and Augustines, became one of the most important parts of Christian literature. That eloquence which, in Rome and Greece, had been confined to civil and judicial affairs, was now inseparably connected with religion. The oratory of the pulpit took its place with that of the bar, the comitia, or the senate, as the historical record of that which once had power-y moved the minds of multitudes. No part of ristian literature so vividly reflects the times, tone of religious doctrine or sentiment, in many es the manners, habits, and character of the iod, as the sermons of the leading teachers.

BOOK IV.

CHAP. IV.

CHRISTIANITY AND THE FINE ARTS.

Time arts.

As in literature, so in the fine arts, Christianity had to await that period in which it should become completely interwoven with the feelings and moral being of mankind, before it could put forth all its creative energies, and kindle into active productiveness those new principles of the noble and the beautiful, which it infused into the human imagination. The dawn of a new civilisation must be the first epoch for the development of Christian art. The total disorganisation of society, which was about to take place, implied the total suspension of the arts which embellish social life. The objects of admiration were swept away by the destructive ravages of Barbarian warfare; or, where they were left in contemptuous indifference, the mind had neither leisure to indulge, nor refinement enough to feel, this admiration, which belongs to a more secure state of society, and of repose from the more pressing toils and anxieties of life.

This suspended animation of the fine arts was of course different in degree in the various parts of Europe, in proportion as they were exposed to the ravages of war, the comparative barbarism of the tribes by which they were overrun, the station heldby the clergy, the security which they could command by the sanctity of their character, and their disposable wealth. At every period, from Theodoric, who dwelt with vain fondness over the last struggles of decaying art, to Charlemagne, who seemed to hail, with prophetic taste, the hope of its revival, there is no period in which the tradition of art was not preserved in some part of Europe, though obscured by ignorance, barbarism, and that still worse enemy, if possible, false and meretricious taste. Christianity, in every branch of the arts, preserved something from the general wreck, and brooded in silence over the imperfect rudiments of each, of which it was the sole conservator. The mere mechanical skill of working stone, of delineating the human face, and of laying on colours so as to produce something like illusion, was constantly exercised in the works which religion required to awaken the torpid emotions of an ignorant and superstitious people.*

In all the arts, Christianity was at first, of course, purely imitative, and imitative of the prevalent degenerate style. It had not yet felt its strength, and dared not develope, or dreamed not of those latent principles which lay beneath its religion, and which hereafter were to produce works, in its own style, and its own department, rivalling all the wonders of antiquity; when the extraordinary creations of its proper architecture were to arise, far surpassing in the skill of their construction, in their magnitude more than equalling them, and in ^{*} The Iconoclasts had probably East than the Barbarians themmore influence in barbariang the selves in the West.

BOOK IV. Throughout the West, the practice of converting the basilica into the church continued to a late period; the very name seemed appropriate: the royal hall was changed into a dwelling for the GREAT KING.*

Subdivisions of the building. The more minute subdivision of the internal arrangement contributed to form the peculiar character of Christian architecture. The different orders of Christians were distributed according to their respective degrees of proficiency. But besides this, the church had inherited from the synagogue, and from the general feeling of the East, the principle of secluding the female part of the worshippers. Enclosed galleries, on a higher level, were probably common in the synagogues; and this arrangement appears to have been generally adopted in the earlier Christian churches.†

This greater internal complexity necessarily led to still farther departure from the simplicity of design in the exterior plan and elevation. The single or the double row of columns, reaching from the top to the bottom of the building, with the long and unbroken horizontal line of the roof reposing upon narrowest dimensions possible. In the monastic churches, the light was excluded, quia monachis meditantibus fortasse officiebat, quominùs possent intento animo soli Deo vacare. Ciampini, Vetera Monumenta. The author considers that the parochial or cathedral churches may, in general, be distinguished from the monastic by this test.

* Basilicæ priùs vocabantur regum habitacula, nunc autem ideo basilicæ divina templa nominantur, quia ibi Regi omnium Deo cultus et sacrificia offeruntur. Isidor.Orig. iib. v. Basilicæ olim negotiis pene, nunc votis pro tuå salute susceptis. Auson. Grat. Act. pro Consul.

† Populi confluent ad ecclesias casta celebritate, honesta utriusque sexús discretione. August de Civ. Dei, ii. 28. Compare Bingham, viii. 5.5. it, would give place to rows of unequal heights, or to the division into separate stories.

CHAP.

The same process had probably taken place in the palatial architecture of Rome. Instead of one order of columns, which reached from the top to the bottom of the buildings, rows of columns, one above the other, marked the different stories into which the building was divided.

Christianity thus, from the first, either at once assumed, or betrayed its tendency to, its peculiar character. Its harmony was not that of the Greek, arising from the breadth and simplicity of one design, which, if at times too vast for the eye to contemplate at a single glance, was comprehended and felt at once by the mind; of which the lines were all horizontal and regular, and the general impression a majestic or graceful uniformity, either awful from its massiveness or solidity, or pleasing from its lightness and delicate proportion.

The harmony of the Christian building (if in fact it attained, before its perfection in the mediæval Gothic, to that first principle of architecture) consisted in the combination of many separate parts, duly balanced into one whole; the subordination of the accessories to the principal object; the multiplication of distinct objects coalescing into one rich and effective mass, and pervaded and reduced to a kind of symmetry by one general character in the various lines and in the style of ornament.

This predominance of complexity over simplicity, of variety over symmetry, was no doubt greatly increased by the buildings which, from an

TT TT

M'" 1970A ATTE ANNE DE TRES À especially it all the manager institutions. The beginner was them a second making at he question in the unimage accounted for our dwellings for the market was the second tected in it adacent in the municipal Tre Grain temple topean tites in three same none of the here of a mil. is a grove, or in some other of manding we eschules attention : in Rome in the practical offices were head by marries wh wither ther swi paintes, but the Emerica were in general surveinded by specialis courts a was buildings for the maintenant of the month charges. If these were not the montels of Constan enticlishments, the same exclusion arrangements, the institution of a municipus wealthy priestly order, attached to the churchs, demanded the same accommodistion. titude of subreditate buildings would crowd troud the central or more eminent house of God; at int where mere convenience was considered, and where the mind had not awakened to the solemn impressions excited by vast and various architectural works, combined by a congenial style of building, and harmonised by skilful arrangement and subordination, they would be piled together irregularly and capriciously, obscuring that which was really grand, and displaying irreverent confusion rather than stately order. Gradually, as the sense of grandeur and solemnity dawned upon the mind, there would arise the desire of producing one general effect and impression; but this no doubt was the later development of a principle which, if at first dimly perceived, was by no means rigidly or consistently followed out. We must wait many centuries before we reach the culminating period of genuine Christian architecture.

II. Sculpture alone, of the fine arts, has been sculpture. faithful to its parent Paganism. It has never cordially imbibed the spirit of Christianity. The second creative epoch (how poor, comparatively, in fertility and originality!) was contemporary and closely connected with the revival of classical literature in Europe. It has lent itself to Christian sentiment chiefly in two forms; as necessary and subordinate to architecture, and as monumental sculpture.

Christianity was by no means so intolerant, at least after its first period, of the remains of ancient sculpture, or so perseveringly hostile to the art, as might have been expected from its severe aversion to idolatry. The earlier fathers, indeed, condemn the arts of sculpture and of painting as inseparably connected with Paganism. Every art which frames an image is irreclaimably idolatrous *; and the stern Tertullian reproaches Hermogenes with the two deadly sins of painting and marrying.† The Ubi artifices statuarum et imaginum et omnis generis simulachrorum diabolus sæculo intulit caput facta est idolatrize ars omnis quæ idolum quoque modo edit. Tertull. de Idolat. c. iii. He has no language to express his horror that makers of images should be admitted into the clerical order.

[†] Pingit illicitè, nubit assiduè, legem Dei in libidinem defendit, in artem contemnit; bis falsarius et cauterio et stylo. In Hermog. cap i. Cauterio refers to encaustic painting. The Apostolic Constitutions reckon a maker of idols with persons of infamous character and profession. viii. 32.

Ehira proscribed paintings on the wi which nevertheless became a co during the two next centuries. , all respects, this severer sentiment was mi by time. The civil uses of sculpture we merally recognised. The Christian empere ected, or permitted the adulation of their sa icts to erect, their statues in the different citis That of Constantine on the great porphyry himn, with its singular and unchristian confusion attributes, has been already noticed. storgius indeed asserts that this statue became object of worship even to the Christians; that lights and frankincense were offered before it, and that the image was worshipped as that of a tutelay god. † The sedition in Antioch arose out of insults to the statues of the emperors; and the erection of the statue of the empress before the great church in Constantinople gave rise to the last disturbance, which ended in the exile of Chrysostom. § The statue of the emperor was long the representative of the imperial presence: it was reverenced in the capital and in the provincial cities with honours approaching to adoration.

1

ύπαντωσι, και δημοι προσκινούσυ ού πρός την σάνιδα βλέποντις άλλά πρός τον χαρακτήρα το βασιλίως, ούκ εν τη φύσει δε ρουμένου άλλ' εν γραφή παραδικτιμένου. Joann. Damascen. de Imperiore και το βασιλικό και δε με να και δε gin. orat. 9. gin. orat. 9. Jerome, however (on Daniel), compares it to the worship demanded by Nebuchadπροσκυνουσιν άρχοντες και ίερο- nezzar. Ergo judices et prin-μηνίαι επιτελούνται, και άρχοντες cipes sæculi, qui imperatorum sta-

^{*} Placuit picturas in ecclesia esse non debere, ne quod colitur et adoratur, in parietibus depingatur. Can. xxxvi.

Vol.ii. p. 408. Philostorg.ii.17. Vol. iil. p. 209.

Vol. iii. p. 234.

Εί γὰρ βασιλέως ἀπόντος είκὼν dναπληροί χώραν βασιλέως, καί modest law of Theodosius, by which he attempted CHAP. regulate these ceremonies, of which the adu-Lation bordered at times on impiety, expressly reserved the excessive honours, sometimes lavished on these statues at the public games, for the supreme .Deity.*

The statues even of the gods were condemned .with some reluctance and remorse. No doubt iconoclasm, under the first edicts of the emperors, raged in the provinces with relentless violence. Yet Constantine, we have seen, did not scruple to adorn his capital with images, both of gods and men, plundered indiscriminately from the temples of Greece. The Christians, indeed, asserted that they were set up for scorn and contempt.

Even Theodosius exempts such statues as were admirable as works of art from the common sentence of destruction. † This doubtful toleration of profane art gradually gave place to the admission of Art into the service of Christianity.

Sculpture, and, still more, Painting, were received as the ministers of Christian piety, and allowed to lay their offerings at the feet of the new religion.

But the commencement of Christian art was slow, timid, and rude. It long preferred allegory tuas adorant et imagines, hoc se nitatum superno numini reservetur. facere intelligent quod tres pueri Cod. Theod. xv. 4. 1.

facere nolentes placuêre Deo.

They were to prove their loyfor the statue in their secret hearts: divinitate metienda. Cod. Theod.
— excedens cultura hominum dig- xvi. 10. 8.

[†] A particular temple was to remain open, in quâ simulachra fealty by the respect which they felt runtur posita, artis pretio_quam representation, the true and legitimate into a ut. * It expanded but tardily during the into enturies, from the significant symbol to the into form in colour or in marble.

The Cross was long the primal, and eventues sole, symbol of Christianity — the cross in the rudest and its most artless form; for many convices elapsed before the image of the Savinar was wrought upon it.† It was the copy of the common instrument of ignominious execution is all its nakedness; and nothing, indeed, so powerably attests the triumph of Christianity as the decrease of this, which to the Jew and to the Hearing was the basest, the most degrading, punishment of the lowest criminal t, the proverbial terrar of the Rumohr. Italienische Forschungen, i. p. 158. We want the German words andeutung (allusion or suggestion, but neither conveys the same forcible sense), and daratellung, actual representation or placing before the sight. The artists who employ the first can only address minds already furnished with the key to the symbolic or allegoric form. Imitation (the genuine object of art) speaks to all markind.

+ The author has expressed in a former work his impression on this most remarkable fact in the history of Christianity.

"In one respect it is impossible now to conceive the extent to which the Apostles of the crucified Jesus shocked all the feelings of mankind. The public establishment of Christianity, the adoration of ages, the reverence of nations, has thrown around the Cross of Christ an indelible and inalienable sanctity. No effort of the imagination can dissipate the Illument of the control of the contro which has gathered runni it; when been so long disserver time it is coarse and humiliating manuscrame. that it cannot be case mes and desecrated into its man y probrium and contempt. To: most daring unbeliever most ourselves it is the symmu - in absurd and irrationsis to mi conceive, but still the miner and venerable symbol — at 1 nuweriii and influential religion. Winter it to the Jew and the Firsten? - the basest, the most negrating punishment of the lowest anninal, the proverbial terms in the wretched slave! It was no then what the most despicable mustvolting instrument of purily ex cution is to us. Yet to the Cross of Christ men turned from deries, in which were embodied every anibute of strength, power, and disnity," &c. Milman's Bampton Lectures, p. 279.

wretched slave, into an object for the adoration of CHAP. ages, the reverence of nations. The glowing language of Chrysostom expresses the universal sanctity of the Cross in the fourth century. "Nothing so highly adorns the imperial crown as the Cross, which is more precious than the whole world: its form, at which, of old, men shuddered with horror. is now so eagerly and emulously sought for, that it is found among princes and subjects, men and women, virgins and matrons, slaves and freemen; for all bear it about, perpetually impressed on the most honourable part of the body, or on the forehead, as on a pillar. This appears in the sacred temple, in the ordination of priests; it shines again on the body of the Lord, and in the mystic supper. is to be seen every where in honour, in the private house and the public market-place, in the desert, in the highway, on mountains, in forests, on hills, on the sea, in ships, on islands, on our beds and on our clothes, on our arms, in our chambers, in our banquets, on gold and silver vessels, on gems, in the paintings of our walls, on the bodies of diseased beasts, on human bodies possessed by devils, in war and peace, by day, by night, in the dances of the feasting, and the meetings of the fasting and praying." In the time of Chrysostom the legend of the Discovery of the True Cross was generally "Why do all men vie with each other to approach that true Cross, on which the sacred body was crucified? Why do many, women as well as men, bear fragments of it set in gold as ornaments round their necks, though it was the sign

кк

VOL. III.

JOOK Symbolof condemnation. Even emperors have laid aside the diadem to take up the Cross." *

A more various symbolism gradually grew up, and extended to what approached nearer to works of art. Its rude designs were executed in engravings on seals, or on lamps, or glass vessels, and before long in relief on marble, or in paintings on the walls of the cemeteries. The earliest of these were the seal rings, of which many now exist, with Gnostic symbols and inscriptions. These seals were considered indispensable in ancient housekeeping. The Christian was permitted, according to Clement of Alexandria, to bestow on his wife one ring of gold, in order that, being entrusted with the care of his domestic concerns, she might seal up that which might be insecure. But these rings must not have any idolatrous engraving, only such as might suggest Christian or gentle thoughts, the dove, the fish t, the ship, the anchor, or the Apostolic fisherman fishing for men, which would remind them of children drawn out of the waters of baptism. ‡ Tertullian mentions a communion cup with the image of the Good Shepherd embossed Chrysost. Oper. vol. i. p. 57.

 569. See in Munter's work (p. 68.
 et seq.) the various forms which the Cross assumed, and the fanciful notions concerning it.

Ipsa species crucis quid est nisi forma quadrata mundi? Oriens de vertice fulgens; Arcton dextra tenet; Auster in lævå consistit; Occidens sub plantis formatur. Unde Apostolus dicit: ut sciamus, quæ ait altitudo, et latitudo, et longitudo, et profundum. A ves quando volant ad sethera, formam crucis assumunt; homo natans per aquas, vel orans, formà crucis vehius. Navis per maria antennà cruci similatà sufflatur. Thau litera signum salutis et crucis describitar. Hieronym. in Marc. xv.

† The 'ΙΧΘΥΣ, according to the rule of the ancient anagram, meant 'Ιησούς Χριστός Θεού Υίὸς Σωτήρ.

1 Clem. Alex. Pædagog. iii. 2.

pon it. But Christian symbolism soon disdained nese narrow limits, extended itself into the whole omain of the Old Testament as well as of the lospel, and even ventured at times over the unallowed borders of Paganism. The persons and icidents of the Old Testament had all a typical r allegorical reference to the doctrines of Christinity.* Adam asleep, while Eve was taken from is side, represented the death of Christ; Eve. ne mother of all who are born to new life: Adam nd Eve with the serpent had a latent allusion to he new Adam and the Cross. Cain and Abel, Joah and the ark with the dove and the olive ranch, the sacrifice of Isaac, Joseph sold by his rethren as a bondslave, Moses by the burning bush, reaking the tables of the law, striking water from he rock, with Pharaoh perishing in the Red Sea, he ark of God, Samson bearing the gates of Gaza, ob on the dung-heap, David and Goliah, Elijah n the car of fire, Tobias with the fish, Daniel in he lions' den, Jonah issuing from the whale's belly r under the gourd, the three children in the fiery urnace, Ezekiel by the valley of dead bones, were avourite subjects, and had all their mystic sig-They reminded the devout worshipper f the Sacrifice, Resurrection, and Redemption of Christ. The direct illustrations of the New Testament showed the Lord of the Church on . high mountain, with four rivers, the Gospels, lowing from it; the Good Shepherd bearing the

CHAP. IV.

^{*} See Mamachi, De Costumi di' primitivi Christiani, lib. i. c. iv.

BOOK IV. lamb *, and sometimes the Apostles and Saints of later time appeared in the symbols. Paganish lent some of her spoils to the conqueror.† The Saviour was represented under the person and with the lyre of Orpheus, either as the civiliser of menor in allusion to the Orphic poetry, which had already been interpolated with Christian images. Hence also the lyre was the emblem of truth. Other images, particularly those of animals, were not uncommon.‡ The Church was represented by ship, the anchor denoted the pure ground of faith; the stag implied the hart which thirsted after the

There is a Heathen prototype (see R. Rochette) even for this good shepherd, and one of the earliest images is encircled with the "Four Seasons" represented by Genii with Pagan attributes. Compare Munter, p. 61. Tombstones, and even inscriptions, were freely borrowed. One Christian tomb has been published by P. Lupi, inscribed "Diis Manibus."

† In three very curious dissertations in the last volume of the Memoirs of the Academy of Inscriptions on works of art in the catacombs of Rome, M. Raoul Rochette has shown how much, either through the employment of Heathen artists, or their yet imperfectly unheathenised Christianity, the Christians borrowed from the monumental decorations, the symbolic figures, and even the inscriptions, of Heathenism. M. Rochette says, "La physionomie presque payenne qu'offre la décoration des catacombes de Rome," p. 96. The Protestant travellers, Burnet and Misson, from the singular mixture of the sacred and the profane in these monuments inferred that these catacombs were common places of burial for Heathens and Christians. The Roma antiquarians, however, have clearly proved the contrary. M. Rostell (in an Essay in the Roms Beschreibung), consider this point conclusively made out in favour of the Roman writers. M. R. Rochetth has adduced monuments in which the symbolic images and the language of Heathenism and Christianity are strangely mingled together. Munter had observed the Jordan represented as a river god.

† The catacombs at Rome are the chief authorities for this symbolic school of Christian art. They are represented in the works of Bosio, Roma Sotteranea, Aringbi, Bottari, and Boldetti. But perhaps the best view of them, being in fact a very judicious and well-arranged selection of the most curious works of early Christian art, may be found in the Sinnbilder und Kunstvorstellungen der alten Christen, by Bishop Munter.

water-brooks; the horse the rapidity with which men ought to run and embrace the doctrine of salvation; the hare the timid Christian hunted by persecutors; the lion prefigured strength, or appeared as the emblem of the tribe of Judah; the fish was an anagram of the Saviour's name; the dove indicated the simplicity, the cock the vigilance, of the Christian; the peacock and the phœnix the Resurrection.

But these were simple and artless memorials to which devotion gave all their value and significance; in themselves they neither had, nor aimed at, grandeur or beauty. They touched the soul by the reminiscences which they awakened, or the thoughts which they suggested; they had nothing of that inherent power over the emotions of the soul which belongs to the higher works of art.*

Art must draw nearer to human nature and to the truth of life, before it can accomplish its object. The elements of this feeling, even the first sense of external grandeur and beauty, had yet to be infused

* All these works in their different forms are in general of coarse and inferior execution. The funereal vases found in the Christian cemeteries are of the lowest style of workmanship. The senator Buonarotti, in his work, "De' Vetri Cemeteriali," thus accounts for this:—
"Stettero sempre lontane di quelle arti, colle quali avessero potuto correr pericolo di contaminarsi colla idolatria, e da ciò avvenne, che pochi, o niuno di essi si diede alla pittura e alla scultura, le quali aveano per oggetto principale di rappresentare le deità, e le favole de' gentili. Sicche volendo i fedeli adornar con simboli devoti i loro vasi, erano forzati per lo più a valersi di artefici inesperti, eche professavano altri mestieri." See Mamachi, vol. i. p. 275. Compare Rumohr, who suggests other reasons for the rudeness of the earliest Christian relief, in my opinion, though by no means irreconcilable with this, neither so simple nor satisfactory. Page 170.

CHAP. IV. Psalm, "Ride on in thy loveliness and in thy beauty."*

CHAP.

But as the poetry of Christianity obtained more full possession of the human mind, these debasing and inglorious conceptions were repudiated by the more vivid imagination of the great writers in the fourth century. The great principle of Christian art began to awaken; the outworking as it were, of the inward purity, beauty, and harmony, upon the symmetry of the external form, and the lovely expression of the countenance. Jerom, Chrysostom, Ambrose, Augustine, with one voice, assert the majesty and engaging appearance of the Saviour. The language of Jerom first shows the sublime conception which was brooding, as it were, in the Christian mind, and was at length slowly to develope itself up to the gradual perfection of Christian "Assuredly that splendour and majesty of the hidden divinity, which shone even in his human countenance, could not but attract at first sight all beholders." "Unless he had something celestial in his countenance and in his look, the Apostles would not immediately have followed him." † "The Heavenly Father forced upon him in full streams that [&]quot;Αμηχανόν γάρ ὅτψ Θεῖον τι πλέον τῶν ἄλλων προσῆν, μηδὲν ἀλλοῦ διαφέρειν τοῦτο δὲ οὐδὲν ἀλλοῦ διαφέρειν τοῦτο δὲ οὐδὲν καὶ δυσειδές, καὶ ἀγενὲς ῆν. Celsus, apud Origen, vi. 75. Origen quotes the text of the LXX, in which it is the forty-fourth, and thus translated: Τῷ ὡραιὀτητὶ σου, καὶ τψ κάλλει σου καὶ ἔντεινον, καὶ κατευοδοῦ, καὶ βασίλευε.

[†] Certe fulgor ipsa et majestas divinitatis occultæ, quæ etiam in humanà facie relucebat, ex primo ad se venientes trahere poterat aspectu. Hieronym. in Matth. c. ix. 9.

Nisi enim habuisset et in vultu quiddam et in oculis sidereum, nunquam eum statim secuti fuissent Apostoli. Epist ad Princip. Virginem.

human form of the Saviour. The distinct assertion T of Augustine, that the form and countenance of , ... Christ were entirely unknown, and painted with every possible variety of expression, is conclusive as to the West. * In the East we may dismiss at once as a manifest fable, probably of local superstition, the statue of Christ at Cæsarea Philippi, representing him in the act of healing the woman with the issue of blood. † But there can be no doubt that paintings, purporting to be actual resemblances of Jesus, of Peter, and of Paul, were current in the time of Eusebius in the East ‡, though we are disinclined to receive the authority of a later writer, that Constantine adorned his new city with likenesses of Christ and his Apostles.

The earliest images emanated, no doubt, from Earliest the Gnostic sects, who not merely blended the images Gnostic. Christian and Pagan, or Oriental notions on their

* Qua fuerit ille facie nos penitus ignoramus: nam et ipsius Dominicæ facies carnis innumerabilium cogitationum diversitate variatur et fingitur, quæ tamen una erat, quæcunque erat. De Trin. lib. vii. c. 4, 5.

The Christian apologists uniformly acknowledge the charge, that they have no altars or images. Minuc. Fel. Octavius, x. p. 61. Arnob. vi. post init. Origen, contrà Celsum, viii. p. 389. Compare Jablonski (Dissertatio de Origine Imaginum Christi, opuscul, vol. iii. p. 377.) who well argues that, consistently with Jewish manners, there could not have been any likeness of μάτων ἐν γραφαῖς σωζομένας ἰστοthe Lord. Compare Pearson on ρήσαμεν. Ibid. loc. cit. the Creed, vol. ii. p. 101.

† Euseb. H. E. vii. 18. with the Excursus of Heinichen. These were, probably, two bronze figures, one of a kneeling woman in the act of supplication; the other, the upright figure of a man, probably of a Cæsar, which the Christian in-habitants of Cæsarea Philippi transformed into the Saviour and the woman in the Gospels: Τοῦτον δὲ τὸν ἀνδριὰντα εἴκονα τοῦ Ιησοῦ φέρειν έλεγον. Eusebius seems desirous of believing the story. Compare Munter.

Ι "Ότε καὶ τῶν 'Αποστόλων τῶν αὐτοῦ τὰς εἰκόνας Παυλου καὶ Πέτρου καὶ αὐτοῦ δή τοῦ Χριστοῦ διὰ χρω-in form and feature, could contribute but little, if CHAP. in the least, to form that type of superhuman beauty, which might mingle the sentiment of human sympathy with reverence for the divinity of Christ. Christian art long brooded over such feelings as those expressed by Jerome and Augustine, before it could even attempt to embody them in marble or colour.*

The earliest pictures of the Saviour seem formed The earliest They all represent the of the Saon one type or model. oval countenance, slightly lengthened; the grave, soft, and melancholy expression; the short thin beard; the hair parted on the forehead into two long masses, which fall upon the shoulders. † Such are the features which characterise the earliest exor glory. On the reverse is an in-scription in a kind of cabalistic character, of which the sense seems to be," The Messiah reigns in peace; God is made man." This may possibly be a tessera of the Jewish Christians; or modelled after a Gnostic type of the first age of Christianity. See Discours sur les Types Imitatifs de l'Art du Chris-tianisme, par M. Raoul Rochette.

* I must not omit the description of the person of our Saviour in the spurious Epistle of Lentulus to the Roman Senate (see Fabric. Cod. Apoc. N. T. i. p. 301.), since it is referred to constantly by writers on early Christian art. But what proof is there of the existence of this epistle previous to the great æra of Christian painting? "He was a man of tall and wellproportioned form; the countenance severe and impressive, so as to move the beholders at once to love and awe. His hair was of the colour of wine (vinei coloris), reaching to his ears, with no radiation (sine radiatione, without the nimbus), and standing up, from his ears, clustering and bright, and flowing down over his shoulders, parted on the top according to the fashion of the Nazarenes. The brow high and open; the complexion clear, with a delicate tinge of red; the aspect frank and pleasing; the nose and mouth finely formed; the beard thick, parted, and the colour of the hair; the eyes blue, and exceed-ingly bright. * * * His counte-His countenance was of wonderful sweetness and gravity; no one ever saw him laugh, though he was seen to weep; his stature was tall; the hands and arms finely formed. * * * He was the most beautiful of the sons of men."

+ Raoul Rochette, p. 26.

BOOK IV.

tant painting, that on the vault of the cemetery of St. Callistus, in which the Saviour is represented as far as his bust, like the images on bucklersin use among the Romans.* A later painting, in the chapel of the cemetery of St. Pontianus, resembles this +; and a third was discovered in the catscomb of St. Callistus by Boldetti, but unfortunately perished while he was looking at it, in the attempt to remove it from the wall. The same countrnance appears on some, but not the earliest, relies on the sarcophagi, five of which may be referred, according to M. Rochette, to the time of Julian. Of one, that of Olybrius, the date appears certainthe close of the fourth century. These, the paintings at least, are no doubt the work of Greek artists; and this head may be considered the archetype, the Hieratic model, of the Christian conception of the Saviour, imagined in the East, and generally adopted in the West. ‡

The Father rarely represented. Reverential awe, diffidence in their own skill, the still dominant sense of the purely spiritual nature of the Parental Deity§, or perhaps the ex-

* Bottari, Pitture e Sculture Sacre, vol. ii. tav. lxx. p. 42.

† This, however, was probably repainted in the time of Hadrian I.

‡ Rumohr considers a statue of the Good Shepherd in the Vatican collection, from its style, to be a very early work; the oldest monument of Christian sculpture, prior to the urn of Junius Bassus, which is of the middle of the fourth century. Italienische Forschungen, vol. i. p. 168. In that usually thought the earliest, that of Junius Bassus, Jesus Christ is represented between the Apostles, beardless, seated in a curule chair, with a roll half unfolded in his hand, and under his feet a singular representation of the upper part of a man holding an inflated veil with his two hands, a common symbol or personification of heaven. See R. Rochette, p. 43., who considers these sarcophagi anterior to the formation of the ordinary type.

Compare Munter, ii. p. 49.
 Nefas habent docti ejus (ecclesse Catholicæ) credere Deum figura humani corporis terminatum. August Conf. vi. 11.

clusive habit of dwelling upon the Son as the CHAP. direct object of religious worship, restrained early Christian art from those attempts to which we are scarcely reconciled by the sublimity and originality - of Michael Angelo and Raffaelle. Even the symbolic representation of the Father was rare. Where it does appear, it is under the symbol of an immense hand issuing from a cloud, or a ray of light streaming from heaven, to imply, it may be presumed, the creative and all-enlightening power of the Universal Father. *

The Virgin Mother could not but offer herself The Virgin. to the imagination, and be accepted at once as the subject of Christian art. As respect for the mother of Christ deepened into reverence, reverence bowed down to adoration; as she became the mother of God, and herself a deity in popular worship, this worship was the parent, and, in some sense, the offspring of art. Augustine indeed admits that the real features of the Virgin, as of the Saviour, were unknown.† But the fervent language of Jerome shows that art had already attempted to shadow out the conception of mingling by the canons of the church of Tours, in the year 850. This period is far beyond the bounds of our present history. See there-fore E. David, pp. 43. 46.

† Neque enim novimus faciem Virginis Mariæ. Augustin. de Trin.

c. viii. Ut ipsa corporis facies simulacrum fuerit mentis, figura probitatis. Ambros. de Virgin. lib. ii.

^{*} M. Emeric David (in his Discours sur les Anciens Monumens, to which I am indebted for much information), says that the French artists had first the heureuse hardi-esse of representing the Eternal Father under the human form. The instance to which he alludes is contained in a Latin Bible (in the Cabinet Imperial) cited by Montfaucon, but not fully described. It was presented to Charles the Bold virgin purity and maternal tenderness, which a vet probably was content to dwell within the vege of human nature, and aspired not to mingle i divine idealism with these more mortal feelings The outward form and countenance could not but be the image of the purity and gentleness of the soul within: and this primary object of Christian art could not but give rise to one of its characteristic distinctions from that of the ancients, the substitution of mental expression for purely corporal beauty. As reverential modesty precluded all exposure of the form, the countenance was the whole picture. This reverence, indeed, in the very earliest specimens of the art, goes still further, and confines itself to the expression of composed and dignified attitude. The artists did not even venture to expose the face. With one exception, the Virgin appears veiled on the reliefs on the sarcophagi, and in the earliest paintings. The oldest known picture of the Virgin is in the catacomb of St. Callistus, in which she appears seated in the calm majesty, and in the dress, of a Roman matron. It is the transition, as it were. from ancient to modern art, which still timidly adheres to its conventional type of dignity. in the sarcophagi, art has already more nearly approximated to its most exquisite subject — the Virgin Mother is seated, with the divine child in her lap, receiving the homage of the Wise Men-

POOE IV.

Bottari, Pitture e Sculture Mémoire de M. Raoul Rochette, Sacre, t. iii. p. 111. tav. 218. See Académ. Inscript.

She is still veiled*, but with the rounded form and grace of youth, and a kind of sedate chastity of expression in her form, which seems designed to convey the feeling of gentleness and holiness. Two of these sarcophagi, one in the Vatican collection, and one at Milan, appear to disprove the common notion that the representation of the Virgin was unknown before the Council of Ephesus. † That council, in its zeal against the doctrines of Nestorius, established, as it has been called, a Hieratic type of the Virgin, which is traced throughout Byzantine art, and on the coins of the Eastern empire. This type, however, gradually degenerates with the darkness of the age, and the decline of art. The countenance, sweetly smiling on the child, becomes sad and severe. The head is bowed with a gloomy and almost sinister expression, and the countenance gradually darkens, till it assumes a black colour, and seems to adapt itself in this respect to an ancient tradition. length even the sentiment of maternal affection is effaced, both the mother and child become stiff and lifeless, the child is swathed in tight bands, and has an expression of pain rather than of gentleness or placid infancy.‡

* In Bottari there is one picture of the Virgin with the head naked. t. ii. tav. cxxvi. The only one known to M. Raoul Rochette.

tures of the Virgin ascribed to St. Luke, the tradition of whose painting ascends to the sixth century, and the Egyptian works which represent Isis nursing Horus. I have not thought it necessary to notice further these palpable forgeries, though the object, in so many places, of popular worship.

CHAP. IV.

[†] A.D. 431. This opinion is maintained by Basnage and most Protestant writers.

[†] Compare Raoul Rochette, page 35. M. R. Rochette observes much similarity between the pic-appears to us in the Christian catacombs. There is no sign of mourning, no token of resentment, no expression of vengeance; all breathes softness, benevolence, charity."*

It may seem even more singular, that the passion The of our Lord himself remained a subject interdicted. as it were, by awful reverence. The cross, it has been said, was the symbol of Christianity many centuries before the crucifix.† It was rather a cheerful and consolatory than a depressing and melancholy sign; it was adorned with flowers, with crowns, and precious stones, a pledge of the resurrection, rather than a memorial of the passion. The catacombs of Rome, faithful to their general character, offer no instance of a crucifixion, nor does any allusion to such a subject of art occur in any early writer.‡ Cardinal Bona gives the following as the progress of the gradual change. I. The simple cross. II. The cross with the lamb at the foot of it. § III. Christ clothed, on the cross, with hands uplifted in prayer, but not nailed to it.

- * Gregory of Nyssa, however, describes the heroic acts of St. Theodorus as painted on the walls of a church dedicated to that saint. "The painter had represented his sufferings, the forms of the tyrants like wild beasts. The fiery furnace, the death of the athlete of Christ—all this had the painter expressed by colours, as in a book, and adorned the temple like a pleasement and blooming meadow. The goric form. dumb walls speak and edify.
 - + See, among other authorities, Munter, page 77. Es ist unmöglich das alter der Crucifixe genau zu bestimmen. Vor dem Ende des siebenten Jahrhunderts kannte die Kirche sie nicht.
 - ‡ The decree of the Quinisextan Council, in 695, is the clearest proof that up to that period the Passion had been usually represented under a symbolic or alle-
 - § Sub cruce sanguincâ niveo stat Christus in agno, Agnus ut innocua injusto datur hostia letho. Paull. Nolan, Epist. 32.

colonnades of that church were painted scenes CHAP. from the Old Testament: among them were the Passage of the Red Sea, Joshua and the Ark of God, Ruth and her Sister-in-law, one deserting, the other following her parent in fond fidelity*; an emblem, the poet suggests, of mankind, part deserting, part adhering to the true faith. The object of this embellishment of the churches was to beguile the rude minds of the illiterate peasants who thronged with no very exalted motives to the altar of St. Felixto preoccupy their minds with sacred subjects, so that they might be less eager for the festival banquets, held with such munificence and with such a concourse of strangers, at the tomb of the martyr.†

Vis nova divisit flumen: pars amne recluso Constitit, et fluvii pars in mare lapsa cucurrit, Destituitque vadum: et validus qui forte ruebat Impetus, adstrictas altè cumulaverat undas, Et tremulâ compage minax pendebat aquæ mons Despectans transire pedes arente profundo; Et medio pedibus siccis in flumine ferri Pulverulenta hominum duro vestigia limo.

If this description is drawn from the picture, not from the book, the painter must have possessed some talent for composition and for landscape, as well as for the drawing of figures.

- Quum geminæ scindunt sese in diversa sorores; Ruth sequitur sanctam, quam deserit Orpa, parentem: Perfidiam nurus una, fidem nurus altera monstrat. Præfert una Deum patriæ, patriam altera vitæ.
- + Forte requiratur, quanam ratione gerendi Sederit hæc nobis sententia, pingere sanctas Raro more domos animantibus adsimulatis. turba frequentior hic est

These mas me treligious desires led them to commit the purity on these pictures, they wo not merely be awakened by these holy example purer mongres and holier emotions; they wo less their eyes assend of their baser appetit as available, which would steal over their souls; at events, they would save less time to waste in induspence of their looser festivity.

in sciency has been the parent of music, p main as he surpassing in skill and magnificence t compositions of earlier times, as the cathedral or the simpler instruments of the Jewish or Pag rengines versing. But this perfection of the beauties to a much later period in Christian h

> Listianus son cura fice, seque docta legendi. His absurb to sairs serve profunts. Venezi Des massen mavertitur aivena Christo. Tour successin opera in Christo miratur aperta. Process cause actes of the table, total Fencis numbus portură Llodere sanctă: A some actionness have per spectacula mentes.
> Agreecula inceres facuta coloribus umbra,
> Quas super experiment interis—ut littera monstret
> Quas super experiment durages onnes picta vicissim > escendint receptatque sibi, vel tardius escen-Sert memores, den grata oculis jejunia pascunt : Annue en se menor stupefactis inserat usus, Pour mois portura famem; sanctasque legenti Historius custorium operum subrepit honestas Exemples inducta plas : potatur hianti Sciences, ama subcunt oblivia vini : Purrous firm ducunt spatio majore tuentes, Poemia rarescunt, quia per mirantia tracto Tempore, im pance superant epulantibus horae. In Natal. Felic., Poema xxiv.

tory. Like the rest of its service, the music of CHAP. the Church no doubt grew up from a rude and simple, to a more splendid and artificial form. The practice of singing hymns is coeval with Christianity; the hearers of the Apostles sang the praises of God; and the first sound which reached the Pagan ear from the secluded sanctuaries of Christianity was the hymn to Christ as God. Church succeeded to an inheritance of religious lyrics as unrivalled in the history of poetry as of religion.* The Psalms were introduced early into the public service; but at first, apparently, though some psalms may have been sung on appropriate occasions—the 73d, called the morning, and the 141st, the evening psalm—the whole Psalter was introduced only as part of the Old Testament, and read in the course of the service. † With the poetry did they borrow the music of the Synagogue? Was this music the same which had filled the spacious courts of the Temple, perhaps answered to those sad strains which had been heard beside the waters of the Euphrates, or even descended from still earlier times of glory, when Deborah or when Miriam struck their harps to the praise of God? This question it must be impossible to answer; and no tradition, as far as we Temple in the Quarterly Review vol. xxxviii. page 20.

[•] The Temple Service, in Lightfoot's works, gives the Psalms which were appropriate to each day. The author has given a slight outline of this hymnology of the ⁺ Bingham's Antiquities, vol. xiv: p. 1. 5.

IV. BOOK are aware, indicates the source from which the Church borrowed her primitive harmonies, though the probability is certainly in favour of their Jewish parentage.

The Christian hymns of the primitive churche seem to have been confined to the glorification of their God and Saviour. considered the language of supplication and humiliation; the soul awoke, as it were, in the hymn to more ardent expressions of gratitude and love Probably, the music was nothing more at firs than a very simple accompaniment, or no mon than the accordance of the harmonious voices; i was the humble subsidiary of the hymn of praise not itself the soul-engrossing art. † Nothing could be more simple than the earliest recorded hymns they were fragments from the Scripture-th doxology, "Glory be to the Father, and to the Son and to the Holy Ghost;" the angelic hymn, "Glor be to God on high;" the cherubic hymn from Revel. iv. 12.—"Holy, holy, holy;" the hymi of victory, Rev. xv. 3., "Great and marvellous an thy works." It was not improbably the cherubic hymn, to which Pliny alludes, as forming part of the Christian worship. The "Magnificat" and the "Nunc dimittis" were likewise sung from the earliest ages; the Halleluia was the constant prelude ^{*} Gregory of Nyssa defines a aymn—"μνος έστιν ή έπι τοῖς ἐπάρ-χουσιν ήμῖν ἀγαθοῖς ἀνατιθεμένη τῷ Θεῷ εὐφημία. See Psalm ii.

[†] Private individuals wrote hymns to Christ, which were gene rally sung. Euseb. H. E. v. 28. vii. 24.

CHAP.

or burden of the hymn.* Of the character of the music few and imperfect traces are found. Egypt the simplest form long prevailed. monastic establishments one person arose and repeated the psalm, the others sate around in silence on their lowly seats, and responded, as it were, to the psalm within their hearts. † In Alexandria, by the order of Athanasius, the psalms were repeated with the slightest possible inflection of voice; it could hardly be called singing. ‡ Yet, though the severe mind of Athanasius might disdain such subsidiaries, the power of music was felt to be a dangerous antagonist in the great religious contest. Already the soft and effeminate singing introduced by Paul of Samosata, had estranged the hearts of many worshippers, and his peculiar doctrines had stolen into the soul, which had been melted by the artificial melodies, introduced by him into the service. The Gnostic hymns of Bardesanes and Valentinus §, no doubt, had their musical accompaniment. Arius

Alleluia novis balat ovile choris.
 Paulin. Epist. ad Sev. 12.

Curvorum hinc chorus helciariorum,
Responsantibus Alleluia ripis,
Ad Christum levat amnicum celeusma.
Sid. Apoll. lib. ii. ep. 10.

† Absque eo qui dicturus in medium Psalmos surrexerit, cuncti sedilibus humillimis insidentes, ad vocem psallentis omni cordis intenzione dependent. Cassian. Instit. ii. 12. Compare Euseb. H.E. ii. 17. Apostol. Constit. xx. 57.

† Tam modico flexu vocis faciebat sonare lectorem Psalmi, ut pronuncianti vicinior esset quam canenti. August. Confess. x. 33.

§ Tertull. de Carn. Christi, 17.

Ξ

The same of the sa

Proposition of the proposition o

The strong resemblance -cate a different source. which it bears to the chorus of the Greek tragedy, ____iv. -night induce a suspicion, that as it borrowed its simple primitive music from Judaism, it may, in turn, have despoiled Paganism of some of its lofty religious harmonies.

This antiphonal chanting was introduced into the West* by Ambrose, and if it inspired, or even fully accompanied the Te Deum, usually ascribed to that prelate, we cannot calculate too highly its effect upon the Christian mind. So beautiful was the music in the Ambrosian service, that the sensitive conscience of the young Augustine took alarm, lest, when he wept at the solemn music, he should be yielding to the luxury of sweet sounds, rather than imbibing the devotional spirit of the hymn.† Though alive to the perilous pleasure, yet he inclined to the wisdom of awakening weaker minds to piety by this enchantment of their hearing. The Ambrosian chant, with its more simple and masculine tones, is still preserved in the Church of Milan; in the rest of Italy it was superseded by the richer

* Augustin. Confess. ix. 7. 1. How indeed could it be rejected, when it had received the authority of a vision of the blessed Ignatius, who was said to have heard the angels singing in the antiphonal manner the praises of the Holy Trinity. Socr. H. E. vi. 8.

+ Cum reminiscor lachrymas meas quas fudi ad cantus ecclesiæ tuæ, in primordiis recuperatæ fidei meæ, et nunc ipsum cum moveor, non cantu sed rebus quæ cantantur, cum liquidà voce et convenientissimà modulatione cantantur: magnam instituti hujus utilitatem rursus agnosco. Ita fluctuo inter periculum voluptatis et experimentum salubritatis; magisque adducor, non quidem irretractabilem sententiam proferens cantandi consuetudinem approbare in ecclesia: ut per oblectamenta aurium, infirmior animus in affectum pietatis assurgat. Augustin. Confess. x. 33. 3. Compare ix. 7. 2.

CHAP. V.

CHAP. V.

CONCLUSION.

Thus, then, Christianity had become the religion of the Roman world: it had not, indeed, confined its adventurous spirit of moral conquest within these limits; yet it is in the Roman world that its more extensive and permanent influence, as well as its peculiar vicissitudes, can alone be followed out with distinctness and accuracy.

Paganism was slowly expiring; the hostile edicts of the emperors, down to the final legislation of Justinian, did but accelerate its inevitable destiny. Its temples, where not destroyed, were perishing by neglect and peaceful decay, or, where their solid structures defied these less violent assailants, stood deserted and overgrown with weeds; the unpaid priests ceased to offer, not only sacrifice, but prayer, and were gradually dying out as a separate order of men. Its philosophy lingered in a few cities of Greece, till the economy or the religion of the Eastern Emperor finally closed its schools.

The doom of the Roman empire was likewise sealed: the horizon on all sides was dark with overwhelming clouds; and the internal energies of the empire, the military spirit, the wealth, the imperial power, had crumbled away. The exter-

DOOK 17. nal unity was dissolved; the provinces wer dually severed from the main body; the Wempire was rapidly sinking, and the Eastern into hopeless decrepitude. Yet though her nal polity was dissolved, though her visible twas prostrate upon the earth, Rome still rule mind of man, and her secret domination main its influence, until it assumed a new outward Rome survived in her laws, in her municipal tutions, and in that which lent a new sanctit reverence to her laws, and gave strength by alliance with its own peculiar polity to the cipal institutions—in her adopted religion. empire of Christ succeeded to the empire of Caesars.

When it ascended the throne, assumed a sup and universal dominion over mankind, became legislator, not merely through public statutes. in all the minute details of life, discharged, in almost all the functions of civil as well as of gious government, Christianity could not but ap under a new form, and wear a far different app ance that the was the humble and private f of a few sections individuals, or only spiritu cornected to a ties. As it was about to er into its recognition onflict with barbarism. unde get the same on of unlimited power, he ever it is a server from its primitive simplici and miles work hom its genuine spirit, it imposs the net to coserve how wonderfully (the who contemplate human affairs with religious mir may assert how providentially) it adapted itself its altered position, and the new part which it was to fulfil in the history of man. We have already traced this gradual change in the formation of the powerful Hierarchy, in the development of Monasticism, the establishment of the splendid and imposing Ritual; we must turn our attention, before we close, to the new modification of the religion itself.

7

Its theology now appears wrought out into a regular, multifarious, and, as it were, legally established system.

It was the consummate excellence of Chris- Christian tianity, that it blended in apparently indissoluble this period. union religious and moral perfection. Its essential doctrine was, in its pure theory, inseparable from humane, virtuous, and charitable disposition. Piety to God, as he was impersonated in Christ, worked out, as it seemed, by spontaneous energy into Christian beneficence.

But there has always been a strong propensity to disturb this nice balance: the dogmatic part of religion, the province of faith, is constantly endeavouring to set itself apart, and to maintain a separate existence. Faith, in this limited sense, aspires This, in general, takes place soon to be religion. after the first outburst, the strong impulse of new and absorbing religious emotions. At a later period morality attempts to stand alone, without the sanction or support of religious faith. One half of Christianity is thus perpetually striving to pass for the whole, and to absorb all the attention, to the neglect, to the disparagement, at length to a total separation from its heaven-appointed consort. multiplication and subtle refinement of theo dogmas, the engrossing interest excited by dominant tenet, especially if they are assoc with, or embodied in, a minute and rigorous montal, tend to satisfy and full the mind complacent acquiescence in its own religious But directly religion began to con Sparance Dicteness. itself something apart, something exclusively matic or exclusively ceremonial, an acceptan certain truths by the belief, or the discharg certain ritual observances, the transition separation to hostility was rapid and unimped No sooner had Christianity divorced morality inseparable companion through life, than it for an uniawful connection with any dominant pass and the strange and unnatural union of Chris talth with ambition, avarice, cruelty, fraud, ever licence, appeared in strong contrast with > primitive harmony of doctrine and inward dist tion. Thus in a great degree, while the Ro world became Christian in outward worship an taith, it remained Heathen, or even at some per worse than in the better times of Heathenism, a beneficence, gentleness, purity, social virtue, marity, and peace. This extreme view may app to be justified by the general survey of Chris society. Yet, in fact, religion did not, except at never com, lete.

rality, though it admitted, at each of its peric . Compare Vol. III. p. 408.

darkest periods, so completely insulate itself, or entirely recede from its natural alliance with a much which was irreconcilable with its pure and original spirit. Hence the mingled character of its social and political, as well as of its personal influences. The union of Christianity with monachism, with sacerdotal domination, with the military spirit, with the spiritual autocracy of the papacy, with the advancement at one time, at another with the repression, of the human mind, had each their darker and brighter side; and were in succession (however they departed from the primal and ideal perfection of Christianity) to a certain extent beneficial, because apparently almost necessary to the social and intellectual development of mankind at each particular juncture. So, for instance, military Christianity, which grew out of the inevitable incorporation of the force and energy of the barbarian conquerors with the sentiments and feelings of that age, and which finally produced chivalry, was, in fact, the substitution of inhumanity for Christian gentleness, of the love of glory for the love of peace. Yet was this indispensable to the preservation of Christianity in its contest with its new eastern antagonist. Unwarlike Christianity would have been trampled under foot, and have been in danger of total extermination, by triumphant Mohammedanism.

Yet even when its prevailing character thus stood Christian in the most direct contrast with the spirit of the feelings Gospel, it was not merely that the creed of Chris-extinct. tianity in its primary articles was universally accepted, and a profound devotion filled the Christian mind, there was likewise a constant under-growth, as it were, of Christian feelings, and even of Chris-

VOL. III.

м м

BOOK tian virtues. Nothing could contrast more stra for instance, than St. Louis slaughtering Sa and heretics with his remorseless sword, a Saviour of mankind by the Lake of Galilee when this dominant spirit of the age did n occupy the whole soul, the self-denial, the even the gentleness of such a heart bore s answerable testimony to the genuine influe Christianity. Our illustration has carried beyond the boundaries of our history, but a the great characteristic distinction of later Cl history had begun to be developed, the sev of Christian faith from Christian love, the pas attachment, the stern and remorseless maint of the Christian creed, without or with partial practice of Christian virtue, or eve predominance of a tone of mind, in some re absolutely inconsistent with genuine Christ While the human mind, in general, became rigid in exacting, and more timid in der from, the admitted doctrines of the churc moral sense became more dull and obtuse purer and more evanescent beauty of Ch In truth it was so much more holiness. in a dark and unreasoning age, to subscribe, least to render passive submission to, certain d doctrines, than to work out those doctrin their proper influences upon the life, the deplore, rather than wonder at, this substitut one half of the Christian religion for the v Nor are we astonished to find those, who constantly violating the primary principles of tianity, fiercely resenting, and, if they had power, relentlessly avenging, any violation of the integrity of Christian faith. Heresy of opinion, we si have seen, became almost the only crime, against which excommunication pointed its thunders: the arker and more baleful heresy of unchristian pasions, which assumed the language of Christianity, was either too general to be detected, or at best ensecuntered with feeble and impotent remonstrance. Thus Christianity became at the same time more · peremptorily dogmatic, and less influential; it assumed the supreme dominion over the mind, while 1 it held but an imperfect and partial control over the passions and affections. The theology of the Gospel was the religion of the world; the spirit of the Gospel very far from the ruling influence of mankind.

Yet even the theology maintained its dominion, by in some degree accommodating itself to the human It became to a certain degree mythic in its character, and polytheistic in its form.

Now had commenced what may be called, neither Mythic age unreasonably nor unwarrantably, the mythic age of of Christianity. Christianity. As Christianity worked downward into the lower classes of society, as it received the rude and ignorant barbarians within its pale, the general effect could not but be, that the age would drag down the religion to its level, rather than the religion elevate the age to its own lofty standard.

The connection between the world of man and a higher order of things had been re-established; the approximation of the Godhead to the human race, the actual presence of the Incarnate Deity rld under the constant and felt and discernible CHAP. erference of supernatural power. God was not by present, but asserting his presence at every stant, not merely on signal occasions and for imrtant purposes, but on the most insignificant acts persons. The course of nature was beheld, not one great uniform and majestic miracle, but as succession of small, insulated, sometimes trivial. metimes contradictory interpositions, often utterly consistent with the moral and Christian attributes God. The divine power and goodness were ot spreading abroad like a genial and equable sunight, enlightening, cheering, vivifying, but breaking out in partial and visible flashes of influence: each incident was a special miracle, the ordinary emotion of the heart was divine inspiration. Each individual had not merely his portion in the com-- mon diffusion of religious and moral knowledge or feeling, but looked for his peculiar and especial share in the divine blessing. His dreams came direct from heaven, a new system of Christian omens succeeded the old; witchcraft merely invoked Beelzebub, or Satan instead of Hecate; hallowed places only changed their tutelary nymph or genius for a saint or martyr.

It is not less unjust to stigmatise in the mass as Imagin fraud, or to condemn as the weakness of superstition, ative state of the huthan it is to enforce as an essential part of Chris-man mind. tianity, that which was the necessary development of this state of the human mind. The case was this.—the mind of man had before it a recent and wonderful revelation, in which it could not but

BOOK IV. acknowledge the divine interposition. been brought down, or had condescended to himself with the affairs of men. But where that faith, which could not but receive thes and consolatory, and reasonable truths, set li the agency of this beneficent power? How it discriminate between that which in its ar discrepancy with the laws of nature (and of laws how little was known!) was miraculous that which, to more accurate observation. wa strange or wonderful, or perhaps the result of nary but dimly seen causes? how still more mysterious world of the human mind, of whi laws are still, we will not say in their primitive comparison with those of external nature, is found obscurity? If the understanding of m too much dazzled to see clearly even mater jects; if just awakening from a deep trance, it every thing floating before it in a mist of w how much more was the mind disqualified to of its own emotions, of the origin, suggestio powers, of those thoughts and emotions, which perplex and baffle our deepest metaphysics.

The irresistible current of man's thought feelings ran all one way. It is difficult to late the effect of that extraordinary power or pensity of the mind to see what it expects to colour with the preconceived hue of its opinions and sentiments whatever presents itsefore it. The contagion of emotions or of pass which in vast assemblies may be resolved, per into a physical effect, acts, it should seem, in a extensive manner; opinions and feelings appears the propagated with a kind of epidemic force and CHAP. manidity. There were some, no doubt, who saw - Arther, but who either dared not, or did not care, stand across the torrent of general feeling. the mass, even of the strongest minded, were inmenced, no doubt, by the profound religious dread assuming that for an ordinary effect of nature, which might be a divine interposition. They were r more inclined to suspect reason of presumption than faith of credulity. Where faith is the height of virtue, and infidelity the depth of sin, tranquil investigation becomes criminal indifference, doubt guilty scepticism. Of all charges men shrink most sensitively, especially in a religious age, from that of irreligion, however made by the most ignorant or the most presumptuous. The clergy, the great The agents in the maintenance and communication of this imaginative religious bias, the asserters of constant miracle in all its various forms, were themselves, no doubt, irresistibly carried away by the same tendency. It was treason against their order and their sacred duty, to arrest, or to deaden, whatever might tend to religious impression. by obligation, by feeling, we may add by interest, to advance religion, most were blind to, all closed their eyes against, the remote consequences of folly and superstition. A clergyman who, in a credulous or enthusiastic age, dares to be rationally pious, is a phenomenon of moral courage. From this time, either the charge of irreligion, or the not less dreadful and fatal suspicion of heresy or magic, was the penalty to be paid for the glorious privilege of

₹:

is a remarkable dearth, at this flourishing period, of CHAP. great names in science and philosophy, as well as in literature.*

Principles may have been admitted, and may Effect on natural have begun to take firm root, though the authoriphilosophy. tative writings of the Christian fathers, which, after a long period, would prove adverse to the free development of natural, moral, and intellectual philosophy; and, having been enshrined for centuries as a part of religious doctrine, would not easily surrender their claims to divine authority, or be deposed from their established supremacy. The church condemned Galileo on the authority of the fathers as much as of the sacred writings, at least on their irrefragable interpretation of the scriptures; and the denial of the antipodes by St. Augustine was alleged against the magnificent, but as it appeared to many no less impious than frantic, theory of Columbus. † The wild cosmogonical theories of the Gnostics and Manicheans, with the no less unsatisfactory hypotheses of the Greeks, tended, no doubt, to throw discredit on all kinds of physical study ‡,

* Galen, as a writer on physic,

may be quoted as an exception.

† It has been said, that the best mathematical science which the age could command was employed in the settlement of the question about Easter, decided at the Council of Nice.

† Brucker's observations on the physical knowledge, or rather on the professed contempt of physical knowledge, of the fathers, are characterised with his usual plain good sense. Their general language was that of Lactantius:—" Quanto faceret sapientius ac verius si exceptione factà diceret caussas rationesque duntaxat rerum cœles-tium seu naturalium, quia sunt abditæ, nesciri posse, quia nullus doceat, nec quæri oportere, quia inveniri quærenda non possunt. Qua exceptione interposita et physicos admonuisset ne quærerent ea, quæ modum excederent cogitationis humanæ, et se ipsum calumniæ invidià liberasset, et nobis certe dedisset aliquid, quod sequeremur."

Div. Instit. iii. 2. See other quotations to the same effect: imminent and immediate. The day of judgment CHAP. was before the eyes of the Christian, either instant, or at a very brief interval; it was not unusual, on a general view, to discern the signs of the old age and decrepitude of the world; and every great calamity was either the sign or the commencement of the awful consummation. Gregory I. beheld in the horrors of the Lombard invasion the visible approach of the last day; and it is not impossible that the doctrine of a purgatorial state was strengthened by this prevalent notion, which interposed only a limited space between the death of the individual and the final judgment.

But the popular belief was not merely a theology in its higher sense.

Christianity began to approach to a polytheistic Polyform, or at least to permit, what it is difficult to call form of by any other name than polytheistic, habits and Christianity. feelings of devotion. It attributed, however vaguely, to subordinate beings some of the inalienable powers and attributes of divinity. Under the whole of this form lay the sum of Christian doctrine; but that which was constantly presented to the minds of men was the host of subordinate, indeed, but still active and influential, mediators between the Deity and the world of man. Throughout (as has already been and will presently be indicated again)

* Depopulatæ urbes, eversa castra, concrematæ ecclesiæ, destructa sunt monasteria virorum et fæminarum, desolata ab hominibus prædia, atque ab omni cultore destituta; in solitudine vacat terra, occupaverunt bestiæ loca, quæ prius multitudo hominum tenebat. Nam in hac terra, in qua nos vivimus, finem suum mundus jam non nuntiat sed ostendit. Greg. Mag. Dial. iii. 38.

which Christ dwelt with the Father; it dropped to CHAP. the earth, and bowed itself down before some less, mysterious and infinite object of veneration. theory it was always a different and inferior kind of worship; but the feelings, especially impassioned devotion, know no logic: they pause not; it would chill them to death if they were to pause for these fine and subtle distinctions. The gentle ascent by worship of which admiration, reverence, gratitude, and love, saints a angels. swelled up to awe, to veneration, to worship, both as regards the feelings of the individual and the general sentiment, was imperceptible. Men passed from rational respect for the remains of the dead *. the communion of holy thought and emotion, which might connect the departed saint with his brethren in the flesh, to the superstitious veneration of relics, and the deification of mortal men, by so easy a transition, that they never discovered the precise point at which they transgressed the unmarked and unwatched boundary.

This new polytheising Christianity therefore was still subordinate and subsidiary in the theologic creed to the true Christian worship, but it usurped its place in the heart, and rivalled it in the daily relics is best shown by the prohibitory law of Theodosius (A. D. 386.) against the removal and sale of saints' bodies. "Nemo martyres distrahat, nemo mercetur." Cod. Theodos. ix. 17. Augustine denies that worship was ever offered to apostles or saints. "Quis autem audivit aliquando fidelium stantem sacerdotem ad altare etiam super

* The growth of the worship of sanctum corpus martyris ad Dei honorem cultumque constructum, dicere in precibus, offero tibi sa-crificium, Petre, vel Paule, vel Cy-priane, cum apud eorum memorias offeratur Deo qui eos et homines et martyres fecit, et sanctis suis angelis cœlesti honore sociavit." De Civ. Dei, viii. 27. Compare xvii. 10. where he asserts miracles to be performed at their tombs.

olytheism differed in its influence, as well as in its CHAP. ature, from that of Paganism. It bore a constant

. Felix. Rome herself, though e possessed the altars of St. Peand St. Paul, poured forth her yriads; the Capenian gate was oked, the Appian way was vered with the devout worshiprs.1 Multitudes came from bend the sea. St. Felix is implored his servants to remove the imdiments to their pilgrimages from e hostility of men or adverse eather; to smooth the seas, and nd propitious winds.2 There is nstant reference, indeed, to prist 3 as the source of this power, t the power is fully and explicitly signed to the saint. He is the evailing intercessor between the orshipper and Christ. But the al distinctions between this paganising form of Christianity and Paganism itself is no less manifest in these poems. It is not merely as a tutelary deity in this life, that the saint is invoked; the future state of existence and the final judgment are constantly present to the thoughts of the worshipper. St. Felix is entreated after death to bear the souls of his worshippers into the bosom of the Redeemer, and to intercede for them at the last day.4

These poems furnish altogether a curious picture of the times, and show how early Christian Italy began to become what it is. pilgrims brought their votive offerings, curtains and hangings, embroidered with figures of animals,

" Stipatam multis unam juvat urbibus urbem Cernere, totque uno compulsa examina voto. Lucani coeunt populi, coit Appula pubes. Et Calabri, et cuncti, quos adluit æstus uterque, Qui læva, et dextra Latium circumsonat unda.

Et qua bis ternas Campania læta per urbes, &c. Ipsaque cœlestum sacris procerum monumentis Roma Petro Pauloque potens, rarescere gaudet Hujus honore diei, portæque ex ore Capenæ Millia profundens ad amicæ mænia Nolæ Dimittet duodena decem per millia denso Agmine, confertis longe latet Appia turbis." — Carm. iii.

" Da currere mollibus undis Et famulis famulos a puppi suggere ventos." — Carm. i.

3 "Sis bonus o felixque tuis, Dominumque potentem Exores, Liceat placati munere Christi Post pelagi fluctus," &c.

" Positasque tuorum Ante tuos vultus, animas vectare paterno Ne renuas gremio Domini fulgentis ad ora. * * * Posce ovium grege nos statui, ut sententia summi Judicis, hoc quoque nos iterum tibi munere donet." — Carm. iii. ing, till at length it became the parent of that CHAP. refined sense of the beautiful, that which was the inspiration of modern Italy, was the worship of -the Virgin. Directly that Christian devotion expanded itself beyond its legitimate objects; as soon as prayers or hymns were addressed to any of those beings who had acquired sanctity from their connection or co-operation with the introduction of Christianity into the world; as soon as the apostles and martyrs had become hallowed in the general sentiment, as more especially the objects of the divine favour and of human gratitude, the virgin mother of the Saviour appeared to possess peculiar claims to the veneration of the Chris-The worship of the Virgin, like most of the other tenets which grew out of Christianity, originated in the lively fancy and fervent temperament of the East, but was embraced with equal ardour, and retained with passionate constancy, in the West.*

 Irenæus, in whose works are found the earliest of those ardent expressions with regard to the Virgin, which afterwards kindled into adoration, may, in this re-spect, be considered as Oriental. I allude to his parallel between Eve and the Virgin, in which he seems to assign a mediatorial character to the latter. Iren. iii. 33. v. 19.

The earlier fathers use expressions with regard to the Virgin altogether inconsistent with the reverence of later ages. Tertullian compares her unfavourably with Martha and Mary, and insinuates that she partook of the incredulity of the rest of her own family. "Mater æquè non demonstratur adhæsisse illi, cum Marthæ et Mariæ aliæ in commercio ejus frequentantur. Hoc denique in loco (St. Luc. viii. 20.) apparet incredulitas eorum cum is doceret viam vitæ," &c. De Carne Christi., c. 7. There is a collection of quotations on this subject in Field on the Church, p. 261. et seq.

The Collyridians, who offered

VOL. III. NN

CHAP. V.

parties denounced eternal punishments against each other with such indiscriminate energy, that hell had become almost the leading and predominant image in the Christian dispensation. This advancing gloom was perpetually softened; this severity, allayed by the impulse of gentleness and purity, suggested by this new form of worship. It kept in motion that genial under-current of more humane feeling; it diverted and estranged the thought from this harassing strife to calmer and less exciting objects. The dismal and the terrible, which so constantly haunted the imagination, found no place during the contemplation of the Mother and the Child, which, when once it became enshrined in the heart, began to take a visible and external form.* The image arose out of, and derived its sanctity from, the general feeling, which in its turn, especially when, at a later period, real art breathed life into it, strengthened the general feeling to an incalculable degree.

The wider and more general dissemination of the worship of the Virgin belongs to a later period in Christian history.

Thus under her new form was Christianity prepared to enter into the darkening period of Eu-

• At a later period, indeed, even the Virgin became the goddess of war: —

'Αεὶ γὰρ οἵδε τὴν φὺσιν νικᾶν μόνη, Τὸκῳ τὸ πρῶτον, καὶ μάχη τὸ δεύτερον.

Such are the verses of George of Pisidia, relating a victory over the Avars.

INDEX.

ABGAR, or Abgarus, of Edessa, his gion through Egypt to parts of ii. 82. 210. 246—253. Its desoasserted correspondence, ii. 319. late condition in the time of Au-Ablutions, emblematic, how far consonant to baptism, ii. 3. gustine, 283. Abraham, the Patriarch, i. 58. ii. African Jews, the, i. 397. 231. 421. Race of, i. 252. 267, Christians, ii. 210, et seq. 268. 298. 412. 446. The Divine 245. 360. promise to, 391. Allusion to - martyrs, ii. 216, et seq. 244. Abraham and Sarah, iii. 233. 246-253. Abraxas, the mysterious word, ii. controversy of the Donatists and their opponents, ii. 364, et seq. 116. Abstinence, ii. 114. Agabus, famine predicted by, i. 410. Abyssinia, Bruce, Salt, and Pearce's Predicts that Paul would be cast account of Christianity in, i. 49. n. into prison, 432. Academy of Athens, philosophy of Agapæ, iii. 435. 437. n. Suppressed, the, i. 35. 439. Achaia, Christianity received in, i. Agatho-dæmon, of the Egyptian 431. ii. 22. mythology, ii. 131. Acts of the African martyrs, ii. 217. Agenario, called Serapion, i. 41. n. Agrippa, Herod, ii. 408, 409, 410. n. 252. n. , the son of Herod Agrippa, -, the, see New Testament, and educated at Rome, i. 43. 418. Apostles. Aderbijan, i. 66. Releases Ananias, 436. He sends Adiabeni, Helena, queen of the, i. Paul prisoner to Rome, 440. 62. Her tomb near Jerusalem, Edict of, ii. 25. 62. Ahriman, or Arimanes, of the Per-Ædesius, the philosopher, iii. 58. sian doctrines, ii. 113. 315, 316. Ælia, on the site of Jerusalem, Ro-Alaric captures the city of Rome, iii. 181. man regulations at, i. 458. ii. 417. Ælius, præfect at Carthage, ii. 373. Aetius, heresy of, iii. 43. 47. n. Albinus, procurator of Judæa, i. 323. 441. ii. 40. Æon, or Emanation, doctrine of an, -, the Consul, his satire on ii. 102. Christ, 109. 118. Constantine, ii. 393. Irritation of the emperor thereat, 399. Æon and Protogenes, ii. 83. 98. Æons, the, of the Gnostics, ii. 83. Alexander, empire of, i. 1. Policy 111. 120, 121. 130. The primary, of, 5. Conquest of Persia by, 61. -, bishop of Constantinople, ii. 457. Æsculapius, Temple of, at Ægæ in Cilicia, ii. 417. -, a Jew of Ephesus, ii, 30. Æthiopia, conversion of, ii 477. -, the coppersmith, ii. 46. Africa, wild mirth of the native tribes of, i. 11. The granary of -, patriarch of Alexandria,

He expels Arius from

ii. 433.

the city, 494.

Rome, ii. 375. Advance of reli-light and darkness, ii. 328. et passim. See Principles. Anthemius, the Emperor, iii. 459. Anthropomorphism of the Greeks, i. 16. 18. ii. 16. Of the Egyptian monks, iii. 309.

Antinous, the quinquennial games in honour of, ii. 153.

Antipater, son of Herod, his intrigues and death, i. 55. 86.

Antioch, Church of, and name of Christians, i. 411. 424. ii. 9. 107. 150. 243. 448. iii. 92. 208, et seq. 213. 381. n. Anciently a chief seat of heathenism, 89. Conflagration of the Temple of Apollo, 93. Council of, 9. Monasteries near, 209.

Antioch of Pisidia, i. 423. Antiochus the Great, i. 60. n. Antonia, the, or fortress near the Temple, i. 343. et passim. Antonines, the, ii. 136. 139.

Antoninus, Marcus, i. 36. ii. 23. Edict of, 178. Persecution by, 178.

Pius, ii. 139. His reign, His rescript, 158. n. His 156. edicts favouring the Christians, 158.

Antoninus, column of, ii. 190. Antonius, Julius, edict of the proconsul, ii. 25.

Antony, St., a true Christian, iii. 297. Sells his patrimony for purposes of charity, 298. His asceticism, 298. Dæmonology, 299. Self-torture, 301. His influence, 303.

Anulinus, præfect of Africa, ii. 366.

Apocalypse, the, ii. 164.

Apocryphal books of the Old Testament, i. 25. 60. 82. 95. ii. 164. 'Gospel of the Infancy,' i. 133. n. Apollo, oracle of, at Miletus, ii. 268. 273. 285. Temples of, 344. n. Worship of, 407. iii. 91. 183. Hymn to, 120. Divination, 120. Oracle of, 120. n.

Apollonius of Tyana, i. 120. ii. 98. 124. 230. 237.

Apollos, Christian sectarian, ii. 25. 75.

Apologists, Christian, ii. 154. 162. n.

163. 182. iii. 475. 'Apology' of Christianity, ii. 154. 157. 165. 182. 215. iii. 476.

Appendix I., Recent Lives of Christ,

II., Origin of the Gospels, i. 124.

- III., Influence of the more imaginative Incidents of the early evangelic History on the Propagation and Maintenance of the Re-ligion, i. 129.

Appii Forum, ii. 32.

Apostles, twelve, commissioned by Sent to preach Christ, i. 225. throughout Galilee, 238. Their uncertainty, 245. n. Their perplexity, 254. Their contention who should be greatest, 259. 330. Collision of, with the Sadducees, They are empowered to niracles, 309. Their Di-293. work miracles, 309. vine Master inculcates humility to them, 330. Incredulity of, respecting his Resurrection, 381. Election of a twelfth, 384. The Holy Ghost imparts to them the gift of divers languages for the advancement of Christianity, 385. 387. The Acts and Miracles of the Apostles, 390. 395. n. 415. 422. ii. 7. 14, et seq. 26. 41. 96. n. Peter and others accused, i. 393. Defended by Gamaliel, 394. Their temporary protection, 395. 408. At the intercession of Barnabas, they receive Paul into the Christian Church, 407. They preach the Gospel throughout Judges, 408. Are persecuted by Agripps, 409. Labours of Paul and Barnabas, 415. 450. Who are invested with the Apostolic mission, 421. 430. ii. 6. n. Martyrdom of some of the, i. 409. 441. The Apostolic history, i. 452. n. 454. ii. 13. 67. iii. 361. n. Argument on the period of Peter and Paul joining the al. ready established Church in Rome, i. 451. n. Martyrdom of Peter and Paul, ii. 42-47. Legends of their missions to divers countries, 61. The primitive Churches collected round an Apostolic teacher, 69, et seq. The 'Apostolic Con-

N N 4

this prelate, 30. His writings described, 38. His return from exile, and authority over the Christian church of Alexandria, 96. His fifth exile, 124. His death, 124. Allusions to, 521. et passim, Athens, Jewish proselytes at, i. 429. State of polytheism at, ii. 13. St. Paul in the Areopagus, 15. Philosophy of, 16. 18. The Emperor Hadrian's visit to, 153. Julian at, iii. 62. The Parthenon, i. 26. iii. 161. n.

Attalus, Roman emperor, iii. 181. –, a Christian martyr, ii. 195.

Augustan Æra, the, i. 1. Augusti and Cæsars, forming four cotemporary authorities in the Roman empire, ii. 304.

Augustine, St., his works effected a change in human opinion, and influence Christianity, iii. 263. His use of Latin, 263. The Augusti-nian theology, 264. His style of writing, 271. His civil life, 273. His studies, 274. Impressed with Manichean notions, 274. His celebrity, 275. His baptism, 276. Controversial writings of, 276. The City of God, 277-281. 477. The Life of Augustine, 282. The siege of Hippo, 284. His death, 284. Remarks of, 439. 457. et passim. His work 'De Civitate Dei,' i. 29. 36. n. De Consensu Evangelist., Other writings of, ii. 128. n. 323. n. 325. n. 335. n. 370. 379. iii. 175. n. 252. n. 286. De Moribus Manichæorum, ii. 336. n.

Augustus, Æra of, i. 1. Sacrifice by Octavius, 27. n. His deification, 29. n. The decree of, 104. Rescript of, in favour of the Jews, ii. 25.

Aurelian, the Emperor, edict of, ii. 176. n. Persecution by, 254, et Aurelius, Marcus, ii. 139. tianity and the philosopher Aurelius, 159. Persecution by this emperor, 159. 182. Three causes of his hostility to Christianity, 160, et seq. 173. His character, 175. His reign, 179. Victor, iii. 106. n.

BAAL, the Sun worshipped as, i. 64. Baalbec, temples of, ii. 412, 417. iii. 149.

Baalpeor, rites of, ii. 225.

Babylas, bishop of Antioch, his martyrdom and relics, ii. 243. iii. 88. n. 92.

Babylon, Jews at, i. 61. 63. n. Controversy respecting [on St. Peter, I. v. 13.], 63. n.

Babylonia, superstitions of, i. 5. 40. 70. Captivity and settlement of Jews in, 61, 62. ii. 312. Caravans from Jerusalem to, i. 111. n.

Bacchus, Temple of, at Alexandria, iii. 153.

Bactria, i. 66. ii. 314. Baharam, King, ii. 337.

Balk, city of, ii. 313.

Bampton Lectures: -- Remarks on Polytheism, by the Rev. H. H. Milman, ii. 6. n. By Mr. Coneybeare, 264. n.

Baptism, rite of, i. 142. 417. ii. 3. 77. iii. 427.

Baptism by Menander, disciple of Simon Magus, ii. 101.

Barabbas, release of, i. 324. 353.

Barbarians, the enemies of the Roman empire termed, ii. 390. Their irruption into the Roman empire, iii. 39. 127.

Bar-cochab, his successes against Hadrian, i. 147. n.

Bardesanes, mystic hymns of, ii. 108. The Poet of the Gnostics, 124. iii. 191.

Bar-Jesus struck with blindness by Paul and Barnabas, i. 422.

Barnabas, of Cyrus, his conversion, i. 407. His conjoint mission with Paul, 415. 422. 424. In company of St. Mark, he quits Paul, 428.

Barrow, Dr. Isaac, ii. 44. n. Bartholomew, St., the Apostle, i. 160. 226.

Basil, St., interview of Valens with, iii. 125, et seq. Orientalism pervades his writings, 187. He was born at Cæsarea in Cappadocia, 193, 194.

Basilides, the Gnostic sectarian, ii. 115.

Basilius, Bishop, iii. 209.

Bath-Kol, or voice from Heaven, i.

Beausobre, M., on the Simonians, ii. 94, 55. On Manicheism, 322, n. 532 n. 337. n.

Beauty, allegurical impersonation of of it 44.

Beelsebub, i. 254.

Belgium ravaged by the Catti, in INL

Belief, diversities of i. 82. et passim. Beatley, Dr., i. 427.

Bernice, wife of Polemo king of Cilicia, i. 425. 440.

Berwa, the Apostles at, ii. 14.

Bertholdt, Professor, Christologia Judgeorum of, i. 58. n. His extracts from certain Samaritan letters, 180.

Bethabara and the ford of the river Jordan, i. 141.

Bethany, Jesus at, i. 269. n. 279. 283, 800, 311, n. 331, n. 383, Beth-esda. Healing of the sick man at the Pool of, i. 215, 216. Judicial investigation into the conduct of Jesus, 217. His defence, 217. His second defence, 218.

Bethlehem, Birth of Christ at, i. 86. iii. 286. The Magi adore the Messiah at. i. 87, 110. The jouriii. 286. ney to, 103. The birthplace of David, 104. Murder of the Innocents at, 113. Church at, ii. 419. Cell of Jerome at, iii. 322. - Gate, the, i. 458.

Bethphage, hamlet of, i. 331. n. Bethsaids, birthplace of Peter and Andrew, i. 189, 226, 278, The Desart near, 241.

Beugnot, M., his ' Destruction du Paganisme,' ii. 462.

Bible, the: -miracles recorded in the Old Testament, i. 23. Books of, predict the coming of the Messiah, 58, 105. The Prophets, 58. 75 Targum, comments on Scripture, 60. Mystic interpreters of, 93. n. Astronomical expressions of, 111. n. The Pentateuch, 314. The sublime doctrines of the, ii. 109. Rejected by the Gnostics, 110. With whom the Old Testament predominated over the Gospel, ii. 363. iii. 99.

St. Jerome's Latin version of, 2 Language of the Old T tament, 363, 465, n. Its persons incidents an allegory of the doctri of the New Testament, 499.

Bingham, Eccles. Antiq., quoted 41 4. iii. 369. n.

Bishop, authority of the, ii. 71.

Bishops, presbyter, of the primi Church, ii. 64. 156. n. nation or consecration Their attention to secular (cerns, 77. Title of pontiff, Growth of the sacerdotal por 365. 381. 439. iii. 179. i 353. 357. 405. Mode of elec of. 366. Metropolitan, 367. Fo ation of the diocese, 367. Cl episcopi, 368. Archbishops, 5 Patriarchs, 369. Managemen the church property intrusted 382. The acconomus, 382. X riage of, 384. Bithynia, spread of Christianity and the neighbouring provinces 140.

Blandina, torture and martydom ii. 196, et seq.

Blasphemy, accusations of: - (Saviour, i. 354. St. Stephen, 3 St. James, 409. n.

Blind, the, restored by Jesus, i. 2: 254, 269, 289,

Boanerges, James and John, nam i. 225.

Bohlen, das Alte Indien, quoted 13. n. 16. n. ii. 81. n. 92. n. Bona Dea, orgies of the, i. 28.

Bona, Cardinal, iii. 515. Bonzes, of India, ii. 86.

Bosphorus, the. ii. 402. Brahma, i. 72. 74. n. ii. 328.

Brahmins, their view of a Deity 15. n. 34. 72. ii. 84.

Britain, vestiges of heathenism in 41. St. Paul's visit to, fabulo ii. 39. n. The Roman power tacked in, 180.

Brosses, De, theory of Egyptian ligion by, i. 16. n.

Brucker, on the faiths of Zoross and Mahomet, i. 68. n.

Buddh, allusions to, i. 98. ii. 325. Buddhism, of the remote East, 98. n. 442. n. ii. 85. 323.

Buddhist monks, ii. 87. n. Burgundians, christianised, iii. 198. Burton, Dr., i. 109. n. 395. History of the Church by, ii. 156. n. Byzantium, city of, the modern Constantinople, ii. 399, 400, et seq.

CABALA of the Jews, chief origin of the Gnostics, i. 63. A traditionary comment on Scripture, 64. The Adam Cædmon, ii. 190. 324.

Cabalistic Sephiroth, the, ii. 83. Cabbalism, ii. 27. 112. 116.

Cæcilian, bishop of Carthage, ii. 368, et seq. Cæsar, Caius Julius, i. 43. 120. ii.

21. n.

Cæsarea in Cappadocia, St. Basil the bishop of, iii. 125, et seq.

– Philippi, Jesus near, supposed to be John the Baptist or Elias, i. 254.

-, proconsuls, or Roman governors, resided in, i. 137. 195. n. 420. Paul's imprisonment at, i. 438.

Cæsarius, a magistrate of Antioch, iii. 215, 216.

Cæsars, the, ii. 48. The Imperial history divided into four periods, 49. The Twelve, 165. Prediction relative to, 169.

-, the Two, assisting the emperors in their administration, ii. 304.

Caiaphas, high-priest at Jerusalem, i. 285. 392. n. His acerbity in the interrogatory of Jesus, 334, et seq. The defence, 335.

Calendar, religious, of ancient Rome, i. 19. iii. 442.

Caligula, his statue commanded to be placed in the Temple at Jerusalem, i. 62. 408. Persecution by, ii. 38.

Calvary, Mount, its real description, i. 358. n. Church on, ii. 419.

Calvin, doctrine of, iii. 264.

Cana, marriage at, i. 161. racle of turning water into wine, considered as anti-Essenian, 161, 162.

Canaanite woman, the, prays Jesus to heal her daughter, i. 251.

Candace, queen of the Ethiopians, i. 401.

Canopus, turned into a city of monks, iii. 160.

Cappadocia, language of, ii. 10.

Capernaum, description of, i. 163. The youth healed by Jesus at, 184. 188. Became the residence of our Saviour, 188, 224, 233, 259, 278. Jesus teaches in the synagogue at, 189. 243.

Cappadocia, Christians of, iii. 125. 193.

Captivity, the Jewish, i. 61-64. The Prince of the Captivity, 95. n. ii.

Caracalla, the Emperor, ii. 200. 205. 225.

Caravans visiting Jerusalem and some Eastern cities, i. 111. n. 164. 287. Cardwell, Dr., his Essay, ii. 39. n. Carpocrates and Epiphanes, ii. 130.

Carpocratians, the, ii. 130. Carthage, city of, ii. 227. Church of, 244. Čyprian suffers martyrdom at, 246-253. The plague at, 249. Dissension and excesses, on the claims of rival prelates of, 364, et seq. Council of, 377. 387.

Casius, Mount, iii. 91.

Cassiodorus, i. 107. n. Cassius, Avidius, victory of, ii. 181. His rebellion, 192. n.

Catacombs of Rome, iii. 500. n. 514. Catholic faith, edict of Theodosius for the universal acceptance of the, iii. 185.

Catholics, Christian party at Car-thage, ii. 367. Or orthodox party of Constantinople, 457. iii. 125. At Alexandria, 28. 37.

, see Roman Catholics.

Cato of Utica, bequeathed the spirit of liberty to the Romans under the Empire, ii. 55.

Cause, primal, in the Creation, i. 66. 72. ii. 84.

Celestial powers, according to Mani, ii. 330.

Celestial bodies, their offices, according to Mani, ii. 333.

Celibacy, early observance of, i. 162. ii. 87. iii. 292. 320. Laws favourable to, ii. 475. Its influence on civilisation, iii. 127. 224. Of in Jerusalem, 212. Change of the national sentiment as to Jesus, 213, 214. 322. Commencement of public accusations against Jesus, 217, et seq. His retirement, Returns to Capernaum, and 223. appoints the twelve Apostles, 224 227. 238. His power exerted in recalling the dead to this world, 229. 238. Compares himself and John the Baptist, 232. Is entertained by a Pharisee, and is anointed from an alabaster box by Mary Magdalen, 233. His conduct towards his relatives, 236. He rebukes the storm, 238. He walks upon the waters, 243. Question of Jesus being the Messiah, 245. n. 264. 280. 290. 314. 412. Public Life of Jesus from the first to the second Passover, 175. Second year of the public life of Jesus, 212. The third year, 247. The last Passover, 287. Concealment of Jesus, 250. 253. 275. recognises him as ' Christ, the Son of the Living God,' 256. The Transfiguration of, 257. He teaches in the Temple, 261. 266. Is denounced by the Sanhedrin, 262. 272. Pharisees perplexed as to the measures against Jesus, 263. His defence before the Sanhedrin, 268. 281. 335, 336. n. The true Shepherd, 275. Visits Jerusalem at the Feast of the Dedication, He asserts his being one with the Father, 281. Caiaphas and the authorities of Jerusalem resolve on putting him to death, 286. Calm demeanour of the Saviour, 300. 330. 333. He enters Jerusalem on the colt of an ass, followed by a rejoicing multitude, 303. 311. n. He declares his approaching death, 307. 317. Causes that prompted the Jews to require it, 322. His betrayal by Judas, 326. 332. His final celebration of the Passover, 329. He institutes the Sacrifice of the Lord's Supper, 329. His prayer to the Father in the garden of Geth-semane, 331. His Agony, 332. Is led prisoner to the house of Annas, 333, et seq. And is interrogated by Caiaphas, 335. arraignment before the Sanhedrin, 335, et seq. Question of their jurisdiction in capital charges, 339. His reproof to Peter, 338. precedent for the trial of Jesus, 342. Motives of the Rulers in carrying Jesus to the tribunal of Pilate, 343. The Roman prefect, and Herod also, declared they found no guilt in Jesus, 351, 354. The Saviour declares, in turn, that Pilate is guiltless of his blood, 356. Insults of the soldiery, 337. The crown of thorns, and mocking of Jesus, 354. The Sanhedrin press the charge of 'blasphemy,' 354. The condemnation of our Saviour, 357. The Crucifixion, 359, et seq. The Passion and Agony, 364. Burial of Christ, 366. His Title of King of the Jews, 360. His Resurrection, 376-382. His Ascension, 383. Advent, and second coming of, 391. 454. The only Messiah, 445. The descendants of the brethren of Jesus brought before the tribunals, ii. 57. Their poverty a cause of their release, 58. Mystical doctrine of the Gnostics, and of Jews, relative to the Messiah, 102. Doctrine of the human nature of, 111. Nature of the Christos, 112. 122. Gnostic notions of, 118. 123—131. A temple of Venus Aphrodite over the Holy Sepulchre, 417. Helena, mother of Constantine, builds the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, and other edifices, 419. The true Cross discovered, 419. Person of the Saviour, 502. Majesty of the hidden divinity, 503. Augustin's description of his beauty, 504. Earliest portraits of, 507. The Father rarely represented, 508.

Christianity, appearance of, i. 3. Its universality, 7. Co-extensive with the Roman Empire, 8. Revolution effected by, 44. Design of this History of, 47. Its influence on civilisation, 47. Different in form at different periods of 340. 381. Different state of the East for the propagation of, 342. And of the West, 343. Civil war of the Donatists and Trinitarians, 364, et seq. Doctrines of, 396. Rise of Constantinople favourable to, 401, 402, et seq. Legal establishment of, 464. Effects on the religion, 464. And on the civil power, 465. And on society, Its progress towards the conquest of the whole world, iii. 1. Worldly reprisals on religion, 1. Elements of Christianity, 5. In the Dark Ages, 39. In the reign of Julian, 55 Toleration of, by Julian the Apostate, 82. far he limited his favours to, 82, 83, It predominated in Constantinople and at Antioch, 89. bable results of Julian's conflict with, 107. Monastic asceticism of, 117. State of, in the East, 124, et seq. It mitigated the evils of invasions by Barbarians, 127. Monasteries and hermitages, 128. The Goths, Gepidæ, Vandals, and Burgundians receive, 136. 138. Its triumph and concentration under Theodosius, 140, et seq. 462. General effects of Monachism on, 311. 316. 321. Survey of the change effected in, 341, et seq. Christians no longer a separate people, 341. Christian writers, 342. Assailed the savage gladiatorial spectacles of Rome, 457. Christian literature, 464. 475. The Ecclesiastical Greek and Latin are new dialects, 465. Church poetry, Latin, 466. Greek, 468. n. Acts of the Martyrs, 469. The Fine Arts, as connected with, 486. Christianity the religion of the Roman world, 525. Christian Theology, 527. Mythic age of Christianity, 531.

Christmas Day, i. 108, et seq. Chronology of the Scriptures, alluded to, i. 106.

of the Life of Christ, i.

187. n. 275. n. 301.

Chronology of the Acts, i. 439. n.

of the Epistles, i. 451.

Chrysanthius, iii. 58, 59. 79. Chrysostom, St., writings of, iii. 90. 187. 497. Bishop of Constantinople, 205. 217. Life of, 206. Political difficulties of, 220. governed by Serapion, his deacon, 225. Is summoned before the Patriarch of Alexandria, 228, Condemned by the Council of Chalcedon, 228. 230. He quits Constantinople, 231. His return, Second condemnation of, 232 234. His retreat, 235. 237. His death, 238. His remains transported to Constantinople, 238. Causes of the persecution of, 227.

233, 234. 238.

Church, the heresies in, i. 63. Articles of the, 79. n. The Apostles establish the primitive Christian, or early, 388. The common fund not a community of goods, 389. Toleration of, at Jerusalem, 394, et seq. Deacons, instituted, 396. Success of St. Stephen, 397. The first martyr, 397. He proved Christian faith to be triumphant over death, 400. Christians of Damascus, 402. The Apostles at Jerusalem admit Paul of the Christian community, 407. 440. Herod Agrippa, grandson of Herod the Great, persecutes the Church of Judæa, 409. On the supernatural release of St. Peter, the persecution ceases for a time, 410. Church of Syria, 411. Church of Cyprus, 407. 411. 422. Church of Antioch, 411. 425. 449. Ordination of Elders, 424. Council of Jerusalem [A. D. 49.], 425. The primitive Christians of, 430. Churches of Asia Minor, 431. The Christian 451. ii. 183. Church of Jerusalem, i. 441. ii. 417, et seq. Christians warned to fly from Jerusalem on the approach of Titus, i. 444. Controversy of the primitive, on election and the preservation of Judaic doctrines, 450.

⁻ of early Christian history, how far uncertain, i. 395.

formed the pontifical office, at Rome, ii. 5.

Cilicia, the Gospel preached in, i. 428. Circumcellions, the, ii. 375, et seq. They defeat Ursacius, the Roman general, 376. Their desire of martyrdom, 377.

Circumcision, rite of, i. 109. 416. 418. 425. ii. 3.

Claudius, the Emperor, i. 43. 408. 429. 452. ii. 31. 51.

Classica, the Latin, iii. 463, et seq. Clean and unclean meats, i. 416. ii.

Cleophas and Mary, parents of James, one of the twelve Apostles, i. 226. Clement of Alexandria, ii. 88. n.

131. n. 264. iii. 383, 384. Clemens, his epistle to the Corinthians, ii. 76. To the Romans,

iii. 364. n.

———, Flavius, put to death by the tyrant Domitian, ii. 60. Clergy and laity, i. 48. iii. 363. The former an aristocracy, then a monarchy, and despotic, i. 49. Clerical order recognised by the Roman Their exemption law, ii. 382. from civil offices, 383, 384. 389. iii. 82. Their influence, iii. 129, 130, 414. Their interference in secular affairs, 220. Morality of the Roman, 327. Ceremonial of laying on of hands, 354. Not distinguished by dress, 377. Wealth of, 378. Uses to which applied, 378. Dignity and advantages of the clerical station, 413. 535.

Comobites, ascetics and monks, ii. 86-95. iii. 305. Dangers of Comobitism, 307. Bigotry of, 307.

Coins, Roman; of Constantine, ii. 381. n.

Colossians, the, ii. 41.

Comedy, iii. 448.

Commandments: — the Decalogue, i. 217. 315. Of Jesus, i. 192.

Commodus, the Emperor, ii. 199. 201. His exhibitions and feats in the amphitheatre, 202. Assumed the attributes of Hercules, 201. 203. n.

Constans, reign of, ii. 378. iii. 2. 11. 18.

VOL. III.

Constant, M., 'Sur la Religion,' character of that work, i. 10. n. 20. n. 27. n.

Constantia, death of, ii. 446.

Constantine the Great, ii. 49. 278. n. 282. 292. His reign, 303. He preserves the unity of the Roman empire, 306. His religion, 350. His conversion, 308. 389. 396. He commences his struggle for the The Cross sole dominion, 344. appearing in the sky, assures him of conquest, 351, et seq. He defeats and dethrones Maxentius, 355. Cruel acts of, 355. 390, 391. 393. iii. 457. His edict from Milan in favour of the Christians, ii. 356. His earlier laws, 358. Summons councils of the churchmen on the dispute at Carthage. 370. 372. Sole emperor, 381. 388. Laws and medals of, 381. 468, 469. His edicts for privileges, &c. Presides at to Christians, 389. the Council of Nice, 390. 397. 441. Execution of Fausta and Crispus, 391. 393. Remorse of the emperor on finding that his son was innocent, 394. 396. 437. Founds Constantinople, 400. His splendour at the dedication of the new capital, 404. 407. His letter of peace to the eastern controvertists, 436. Change in the emperor's opinions, 445. His quarrel with Athanasius, 454. 458. His baptism on his death-bed, 458. Extent to which he showed favour to the Christians, 460. How far he suppressed Paganism, 460, et seq. Funeral of the emperor, 476. Accession of the sons of this Christian emperor, iii. 1.

Constantinople founded, ii. 400, et seq. A Christian rather than a Pagan city, 402. Its public edifices, 403. Church of St. Sophia, 404. iii. 47. Statues of the old religion set up, ii. 406. Remains of pagan mythology at, 407. Image of Constantine on the porphyry column, as combined with Christ and with the Sun, 408. The Palladium carried from Rome to, 408. The amphitheatre, 410.

Dæmonology, iii. 299.
Dæmons, i. 71. 235. n. 238. ii. 267.
The Agatho-dæmon, ii. 131.

Damascus, Saul's journey to, i. 402. Christians of, 403. Temple of, iii. 149.

Damasus, pope, iii. 167. 380.

Daniel, the prophet, i. 66. 75. 299. Visions of, i. 71.

Daphne of Antioch, voluptuous rites of, i. 427. Grove of, iii. 89. 91, 92.

Darkness, preternatural, during the crucifixion, i. 363.

Darkness, the realm of, ii. 329. n. David the son of, i. 56. n. 59. 78

David, the son of, i. 56. n. 59. 78. 95. 102. 159. 295. Royal lineage of, i. 94. 101. 107. Proscribed by Domitian, ii. 57. The Messiah predicted as the son of, i. 315. Who yet confessed him to be his Lord, 316. Prophecies of the Royal Psalmist, 316.

Deacons, institution of, i. 396. ii. 64.

Dead Sea, the, i. 140. 297.

Deaf and dumb cured, i. 253.

Decapolis, district beyond the Jordan, i. 197. 253.

Decius, reign of the Emperor, ii. 225. Persecution of the Christians by, 241, et seq. Slain by the Goths, 253.

Decurions of Roman municipalities, ii. 382, 384.

Dedication, Feast of the, i. 276. 277. n. 279. n.

Deity, attributes of the, i. 22. 34. 132. ii. 363. iii. 295. Unity of, 21. 45. ii. 35. 405. Opinions of the ancients on, i. 40. 42. ii. 83. 99. 236. Is removed from connexion with the material world, i. 72. Pure and immaterial, iii. 189. Heretical assertions relative to the, ii. 99. 106. 108. 426.

Delphic tripod, at Constantinople, ii. 407.

Demas, disciple of St. Paul, ii. 42. Demetrius, exciter of tumult at Ephesus, ii. 29.

Demiurge or Creator, ii. 84. 109. 117, et seq. 127. 132. 156. n.

Demophilus, an Arian bishop of Constantinople, iii. 203.

Derbe, town of, Paul and Barnabas preach at, i. 423, 424.

Dervishes, ii. 86.

Desert, the Temptation supposed to be that of Quarantania, i. 156. Jesus feeds the multitude in the, 241. Ascetics and Essenes of the, ii. 93.

Deuteronomy, passages of, expounded, i. 314.

Diagoras of Melos, ii. 20.

Diana of the Ephesians, ii. 29, 30. 103.

Dicæarchus, Macedonian naval commander, i. 6. n.

Dio Chrysostom, oration of, ii. 21.

Dioclesian, the Emperor, ii. 240. Persecution under, 259, et seq. His character, 261. His religion, 266. His malady, 269. 280. His abdication, 269. n. 280. 345. His constituting two Augusti and two Cæsers, discussed, 304.

Diogenes and the cynic philosophy, ii. 21.

Dion Cassius, historical details from, ii. 43. 46. 158. n. Fragments of, recovered by M. Mai, 203. n.

Dionysiac mysteries, the, i. 7.

Dionysius, his view of religion, i. 39. Dioscuri, the, ii. 406.

Disciples, the, of Jesus, i. 159. 164. 175. 189. The twelve, appointed by Jesus as Apostles, 225. The seventy, i. 278. The two, at Emmaus, 380.

Divination, rites of, ii. 359. Suppressed by Constantine, 359. In Italy, iii. 183.

Divorce, among the Jews, i. 104. n. Roman law concerning, i. 473. iii. 398. n.

Docetæ, the, ii. 111. 426.

Domitian, the Emperor, i. 94. ii. 53. Persecution under, ii. 45. n. He annuls the edict against the Christians, 58. His suspicion again excited, 59.

Domitilla, niece of Domitian, banished to Pandataria, ii. 60.

Donatus, a Numidian bishop, ii, 367, et seq.

Donatus, a second, anti-bishop of Carthage, ii. 372.

Donatism, controversy of, with the 002

= > A. 128, 296, 30 - of Egyptian wor - red 150-19 hebical remarks --- :ne Emperor. Religion Religion · == - meditated by .: . = Church E in in the state of the which downs if E. S. i comme mysteries the i :3 Franco Temple of E. E. Line tradition and ense ne re-appearance . 255, 257, 364, Elijah, the still small voe .. 251. t 📞 .: His person : tile, i. 5, 12, 15, ance in the test of the c 74 79, 98, 172, Se. 4. discourse in the Elizabeth, the his or son : 72. 82. et seg. 118, >-318. Persecution tist, i. sic. and or. Christians in the, ii. 178. Elsley's Amazantions on the Marts of the, near to i. 105. n. *jac Ac., i. 166. Sepulchres Elvira, council of, iii. 358.2 is the. 377. Gnostics of the, ii. Elymas, the sorcerer, i. 42 1 . 107. Traditions of the, ii. Elysium, aristocratic, L 45 Propagation of the Christian Emanation, doctrine of i. 5. the, ... 22-64-51.316-in et prisin. The East still 102, 109, 111, 324, Emmaus, the disciples at . gradung selati Emblems, Christian, iii. 50 Later Courches in 589, iii, 124, Emesa, the conical black sa Laster, Festival of, ii. 435. Time ii. 226. of observing, iii, 309. Emile of Jean-Jacques Rouss Ebal, Mount, the Law read on, i. 51. n. 179. Ennius, i. 42. Eden, Garden of, ii. 110. Ennoia, ii. 119. Edesa, the King of, fable relating Ephraim, tribe of, in Samaru. to, ii. 108, 319. Temple at, iii. 147. 181. Education at Rome, iii. 83. Ephesus, Temple of, ii. 6. z. Egeria, ii. 91. -, Church of, i. 451. 4: Egypt, worship of Osiris, Isis, &c., ii, 26, 41, 55, 64, The em i. 13, 41, ii, 51. Theories regardscribed, 24. The celebrated Te ing the political religion of, i. 16. of Diana at, 24, et seg. Col between Orientalism and Ca Deity, the worship of the higher class in ancient, 23. Egypto-Jewish theology, 80. ii. 82, 93. Egyptoanity at, 103. Ephrem, St., the Syrian, iii. 180 I light of the Holy Family into, i. Epictetus, i. 36. 113. Monks of, ii. 93. State of, Epicurus, doctrine of, accordan in the reigns of Trajan and Ha-Greek character, i. 85. C drian, 149, 152, 153, 155, n. Remended by Lucretius, 42. ii. 18

The Athenian followers of, The Roman devotees of, 287.

Epiphanius, ii. 328. iii. 474.

bellion of shepherds in, 181, Deserts surrounding, iii. 31. The hermit Antony, 31. Monks and Epirus, ii, 41.

Rquinox, vernal or autumnal, i. 13.
Erdiviraph, vision of, ii. 314.
Erictho, evoking the dead, i. 43.
Erskine, Mr., on the Zendavesta, i. 68.
Esau, race of, i. 446.
Esdras, Second Book of, i. 82. n. ii. 165.
Essenes, the ascetic sect of, i. 84. 93. 141, 142. 161, 162, 163. 297. 389. ii. 67. n. 86. 88. 92. 114.
Etruscans, the, i. 18. Haruspices of, iii. 105.

Eucharist, the, i. 329, et seq. ii. 77. 335. iii. 428. Eudoxia, the Empress, her character, Eudoxia, the Empress, her character, iii. 227. 230. 233, et seq. Her statue, 234. Eudoxus of Antioch, iii. 45. Bishop of Constantinople, 47. 124. Euhemerus, his system irreligious, i. 42.

Eugenius, Emperor, iii. 178. His apostasy, 173.

Eumenius, Panegyric of Constantine, by, ii. 344.

Eunomius, iii. 47. n.

Eunuch, the, converted to Christianity, i. 401.

Eunuchs, government of the, iii. 345. Eusebius, bishop of Nicomedia, ii. 436. 446. And bishop of Constantinople, 447. iii. 12. 367.

Eustathius, bishop of Antioch, accused of Sabellianism, ii. 448. His mission to the Iberians, 481.

Eutropius, Proconsul of Asia, accusation against, iii. 121.

the eunuch, iii. 222. His life saved by St. Chrysostom, 224. Afterwards beheaded at Chalcedon, 225.

Evangelista, the, i. 51. 53, 54. 60. 95. 105. n. 106. n. 111. n. 149. 152. 279. n. 383. n. Style of the, i. 375. See Appendices to chapter ii.

vol. i. at page 115—132. of vol. i. See New Testament.
Evil, principle of, i. 71. 155. ii. 84.
Spirits of, ii. 113, 114.
Excommunication, sentences of, ii. 257. iii. 404. 407.
Exodus, passages from the Book of, i. 314. 328. n.

Exorcism, i. 234. By the name of Jesus, 431. ii. 27. The name of God, ii. 27. n.

Exorcists, Jewish, ii. 27, 28.
Ezekiel, chariot of, i. 65. n. On a future state, 75.

Tragedus, ii. 166. n.

Ezra, i. 61.

Fabianus, Bishop of Rome, put to death, ii. 242.

Fabiola, her funeral at Rome, iii. 433.

Fable, succeeded to Nature worship, i. 14. Theogony of the Greek poets, 17. Obscenity of mythological, 18. n. Why embodied in ancient history, 38. Of heathenism, 38.

Fabricius, F. Albert, ii. 353. Fadus Cuspius, procurator of Judæa, i. 418.

Faith, iii. 532.

Faquirs, ii. 86.

Faustus, quoted by Augustin, ii. 334, iii. 439.

Fatalism, doctrine of, ii. 19.

Fathers, traditions of the, iii. 365. Fausta, the Empress, put to death by order of Constantine, ii. 391—

396. Domus Faustæ, 361. n. Felix, his character, i. 419. His administration of the Roman province of Judæa, 419. 434. 439. n. St. Paul before, 438. Affair of Drusilla, ii. 98.

-, bishop of Apthunga, ii. 371. 373.

Festivals of ancient Rome, i. 19. iii. 183. Of the Jews, i. 248, 254, 257. 261. 277. n. 279. n. Of the Church, iii. 435.

Festus, Porcius, Roman governor in Judæa, i. 323. St. Paul accused before, 439.

003

ì

....

Service day

•

Fetichism, description of i. 11. 16. Fig-tree, barren, carned, i. 907. 509. A type of the Jewish nation, 30%. Figs, species of, i. 307. Fine arts, the, ii. 495. Fire, worship and mactity of, ii. AS. 316. Finhermen, disciples of Jesus, i. 189. 236. Fishes, miraculous draught of, i. 189. Flavianus bishop of Antioch, iii. 213. 216. Florus, Roman procurator of Judina, L 323, 419, iL 40, Fohi, traditions of, i. 99. n. Fortune of Rome, Temple of the, ii. S47. Fortune, the, of Byzantium, ii. 45. Franks, the, orthodoxy of, ii. 423. B. Invasion by, iii, 141. Freewill, doctrine of, iii. 267. 269. Frumentius, bishop of Acum, his successful mission to the Æthiopians, ii. 479. Fundanus Minutius, ii. 155. Future state, a, i. 25. 39. 75. 205. False notions respecting the nature of, i. 313, et seq. Funerals, Christian, iii. 431, 432. Gabriel, name of, i. 70. Messenger of od 92. Gad, the prophet, i. 64. Galatia, Church of, i, 431, 451, ii. 44. Galerius Maximus, proconsul ii. 251. Sw. n. He condemns Cyprian, 252. Galerius, Emperor. His reverses in the East, 271. Persecutions by, 272-277. Becomes first emperor, 281. His malady and death, 285, 286. Edict of, 285, et seq. Galileare, the. i. 177, 193, n. Massacre of certain, at the Passover, 248, 290. Their blood shed by Pi ate amid the sacrifices in the Temple, 326. They murmuragainst Jesus, 261. They refuse tribute to Rome, 312. The Apostles were Galileans, and made numberless converts, 385. Galilee, i. 95, 103, 164, 188. Its population, 195. The Tetrarchate Its of, i. 114. 195. Jesus made a progress through, 194. Is unmolested, 197. The Apostles return to, 352.

Gellienus restores Church, and resci Valerien, ii. 254. Gothic invasion, the, iii. 195. allio, proconsul of Achain, i. t ii. 22, et seq. Gallus, brother of Julius, ii. 56. Gamaliel, of the Pharinic set. fends the Apostles before the ! bedrin, i. 394. Games, public, ii. 145. iii. (Quinquenniel, emblished at) tinea, 153. The Secular, 240. Ganges, the, i. 142. ii. 82. Gaudentius, Bisbop of Rimini death, iii. 47. Gaul, ancient superstitions of i Persecution in Southern, ii. Idolatry extirpated in 161. Gautama, Somene Coden, Buddh, i. 98. Generation, theories of, as to mundane system, i. 13. Gennesareth, Lake or Sea of, i. ! 188. 226. 245. 382. Genos and Genea, ii. 83. Gentiles, the, i. 146. 253. 417.4 ii 35. Differences between and Gentile partially abrogate St. Peter, i. 416. Various of nations embrace Christianity. Their admission into the fol-Christ, by the Apostles, 435. P the Apostle of the, ii. 43. George of Cappadocia, bisho Alexandria, iii. 28, et seq. Gepidæ, the, iii. 138. Gerizim, Mount, in Samaria, i. 1 The Law read on, 1 182. Worship of the God of Abral on, 319. German writers on Christianity 372. n. Germany, confederacy of its nat against the Roman empire, ii. 1 190. 390. iii. 141. Gervaise, St., and Protadeus, martyrs, iii. 253. Gesenius, critic and commentato Isaiah, i. 59. 63. n. On s Samaritan poems, i. 181. n. Geta, accession of, ii. 217.

Getæ, the, superstitious practices

ii. 321.

Gethsemane, Garden of, i. 331. Gibbon, the historian, quoted, i. 39. n. 42. n. 66. 147. n. 363. n. ii. 39. n. 316. n. 379. iii. 101. n. 175. 199.

Gladiatorial shows, iii. 455, et seq. Glaucias, a disciple of St. Peter, ii.

Gnostic doctrines, i. 63. 69. n. 162. n. ii. 83. 323. 426. Christianity of the East, i. 413. ii. 107. Rejection of Scripture by the Gnostics, ii. 110. Gnosticism, its influence on Christianity, ii. 88. 95. 102. Primal deity of, 108. 111. 236. Saturninus, a distinguished head of the later, 112. Various sects of, 114. Allegory of Valentinus, 118-124. Bardesanes the mystical poet of the, Gnosticism had many converts, but was not a popular belief, 132. It was conciliatory towards Paganism, 133. Images, iii. 505, 506.

God, ideas of the Divinity and Creator, i. 14, 15. 23. 34. 45. 51. 218. n. 314. ii. 3. 16, et seq. 83. 108. 119. 130. 236. 328. The one God of the Mosaic religion, i. 21, 22. Is Power under the old religion, 22. 173. Love under the new, A Spirit, 22. Is invisible, 22. 25. The divine attributes, i. 25. 46. 72. n. ii. 99. 114. 116 iii. The Father's recognition of 268. Jesus at baptism, i. 151. The Universal Father, 207. 319. 447. ii. 19. Jerusalem, or Sion, his chosen dwelling, i. 443. 447. The name of, having power over spirits, ii. 27. The nature of the Deity, 363. 405. The sect of Patripassians declared that God the Father suffered on the cross, 429.

Gods, Pagan, i. 6. 19, 20. 38, 39. 427. n. ii. 29, 30. 52. 103. 139. 145. 150. n. 168, 169. 192. 227. 230. 291. 406. iii. 53. 65. The idols, shrines, and temples of, destroyed, 144, et seq. 166. 173. 182. et passim.

Golgotha, the Place of a Skull, i. 359. n. Good, principle of, i. 76.

Good and evil, ii. 84.

Goodness of divine power, i. 45. 51. 173. 207. 218. 235.

Gorgonius, suffers death at Nicomedia, ii. 277.

Gospel, the, preached to the poor, by Jesus, i. 186. By Paul and Barnabas, 421. By St. John, ii. 103. Harmonies of the, i. 279. et passim. The originals or copies, in Hebrew or Aramaic, 459. Pure religion of, ii. 355. 363. See Evangelists, and New Testament.

Gospels, the, embody ideal perfection, i. 51. Harmony of doctrine and facts in, 53. iii. 266. The three first, i. 53. St. John's argumentative, 54. Texts relating to the Messiah, 60. 95. 110, 111. n. On St. Luke's Gospel, 105. n. 106. n. History of the Saviour in, 116—122. Origin of the, 124—129. Their influence on the propagation of Christianity, 129—132. Time of their general reception, ii. 73. iii. 266. Spurious Gospels, 472.

Gothic language, the, iii. 136.

Goths, their invasions of the empire, ii. 253. iii. 137. 181. Early Christianity of the, 135. Arianism of the, 138.

Gradivus or Mars, i. 6. 18. Grace, doctrine of, iii. 269.

Granianus, Serenus, pro-consul, ii. 155.

Gratian, the Emperor, iii. 163. 165. Is murdered, 168.

Grecian mythology and worship, i. 5. 18. 23. ii. 99. The priesthood less connected with the state than at Rome, 5. Temples, dimensions of celebrated, 412. n.

Greece, names of divinities in, i. 5.
Anthropomorphism of, 16. Its religion that of the arts and games, &c., 18. Notions of one Deity secretly entertained by the philosophers of, 23. 456. ii. 17.
The Judæo-Grecian system, i. 79.
297. The Jews esteemed most other people to be Greeks, 251. n.
305. Jews resident in, and Christian Church established in, 429.
ii. 7. 158. Ascetics unknown to 004

Hermeneutics, or interpretation of Sacred Writers, iii. 477.

Hermits, ii. 93. iii. 31. Compelled by Valens to join his armies, 128.

Hermogenes, heresiarch, ii. 268. n. iii. 493.

Herod the Great, reign of, over Judæa, i. 54. 94. 106. 110. 123. 312. 356. ii. 145. Fate of his sons, i. 55. His disease, 85. His death, 86. ii. 285. His kindred. i. 106. 425. n. His subtle character, 112. 283.

Herod Antipas, i. 114. 145. n. Tetrarch of Galilee and Persea, 176. 195. Imprisons John the Baptist for denouncing his marriage with Herodias as incestuous, 176. He dreads an insurrection, 176. n. He puts the Baptist to death, 239. He sends Jesus with insult to Pilate for judgment, 351. death (A. D. 44.), 395. n.

Herod Agrippa professes the strictest Judaism, i. 408. He puts St. James to death, and imprisons Peter, 409. His sudden death in the fourth year of the Emperor Claudius, 410.

Herod the Irenarch, ii. 185.

Herodians, the, i. 83. 106. 311. 312. n.

Herodias, wife of Herod Philip, incestuous with Herod Antipas, i. 176, 239. The daughter of, 240. Hieroglyphics, the name of Thoth, i. 74.

Hilarianus, ii. 224.

Hilary of Poictiers, iii. 32. 36. n. 37. n. 42.

Hilary of Phrygia, iii. 120.

Hippocrates, opinion of, i. 234. n. Hippodrome of Constantinople, ii. 406, 407. 410.

Historians, ancient, i. 38.

History, iii. 474.

History and Fable, old connexion of, i. 38.

Holidays, iii. 442.

Holy Ghost, the, typified by a dove, i. 151. The Comforter, 330. Descent of the, on the day of Pentecost, 385, 387. The gift of, poured out on Gentiles, 417. ii. 26. 27.

Holy Land, the, i. 239, 251. 413. The pilgrimage to, iii. 286. et passim.

Homer, fable immortalised by, i. 17. Not allegorical, 17. n. His heroes in Elysium, 45.

Homoousion, the, ii. 443. iii. 9, 37.

Homophorus, mythos of Atlas or, ii. 324. And Splenditenens, 324. 332. n. 334.

Honey, wild, i. 142.

Honorius, the emperor of the West, or of Rome, iii. 177. Laws of, 177. 179. 459.

Horace, i. 42.

Horus, ii. 121, 122.

Hosius, bishop of Cordova, ii. 437. 439. iii. 15. His fall, 25. 42.

Hug, German critic, error of, i. 357. n.

Human nature of Jesus, doctrine of the, ii. 111.

Humanism, doctrine of, ii. 103.

Humanity, laws relating to, i. 469. Hume, David, i. 12. n.

The Latin, Hymns, iii. 436. 519. 467. Of the primitive churches, 520. Gnostic, 521.

Hymettius accused of malversation, iii. 117.

Hyrcanus, high-priest at Jerusalem, i. 92.

IAMBLICHUS, on the Life of Pythagoras, and on the Mysteries, ii. His wisdom, iii. 79. Suspected of incantations, &c., 121.

Iberians, conversion of the, ii. 480. iii. 141.

Iconium, the people of, expel Paul and Barnabas, i. 423.

Ideler, Handbuch der Chronologie, i. 111.

Iddo, prophet, i. 64.

Idolatry, denunciations of Moses against, iii. 87. Abolished, and the idols destroyed, 150-160. 171.

Ignatius, bishop of Antioch, his epistles, ii. 74. n. 151. iii. 361. Trial of, before Trajan, ii. 151.

Courth were Grantic, in. 205.

Landison, horner, ii. 221. Of much, abeliated, iii. 145.

Landison, horner, ii. 221. Of much, abeliated, iii. 145.

Landistry of motions superstitions, i. 21. 427. ii. 51. Of the Curpomulate, 131.

Landistry of the seul, i. 55. 56.

St. 171. ii. 177. iii. 264. Sentiment of the anticents on the, i. 40.

Landistry of the sentiment of muchine, 45. Effects of this doctrine, 371.

warship of one God by bealmin in, i. 15. 25. Allegory and purity combined in the religion of, 14. ii. 204. The Ganges and Hindoo ablution, i. 142. ii. 82. 92. The emmation doctrine of, 83. Cutes of, 92. Beligious system of Zovoster, 313. [See Zovoster.] The neaver India, 471.

Innecents, massacre of the, i. 113, 123. Intelligence, the Divine, ii. 116.

Investion of damons, i. 285, n. Ireness, writings of, ii. 29, iii. 270. On Simon Magus, ii. 98, n. On Benildes, 115, n.

Issish, the Prophet, i. 59. 81, 92, 144, n. 186.

Imir. Ascensio, an apocryphal book published from the .Ethiopic, i. 95. n.

Isis. Temples of, ii. 139. 168.

Isis and Serapis, immoral rites of, i. 7, 41. Osiris and, 12, ii. 7, n. Israel, Messiah the hope and expectation of, i. 242, n. 304, 411.

Israelites, the, i. 144. 146. 252. 388. 448. ii. 165. The twelve tribes, i. 224.

Italy, rural gods of ancient, i. 18. Legends and festivals of, 21. Pestilence in, ii. 181. Vestiges of heathenism long prevailing in parts of, iii. 183.

Jablonski, the Opuscula of, i. 109. n. ii. 231.

Jaffna, or Jamnia, near Jerusalem, i. 444.

Jairus's daughter, raising of, by Jesus, i. 238.

James, St., disciple of Jesus, and Apostle, i. 189. 225. 407.

í

Called the Just, +43. He us tynism, 409. +42.

Jamenius and the Jamenius, ii

Jehreals, attributes of, i. 21. 65. ii. 110.

Jeremiah, the Prophet, i. 157, 255. Jericho, the blind man by the wayside near, i. 289.

Jerome, St., i. 99. n. 225. n. 285. n.
El. 117. 125. 169. 187. 465. n.
Life of, 285. 325. Introduces Mouachism in the West, 286.
Version of Seripture into Lain,
286. 288. He visits Paleston,
287. Trials in his retreat, 284.
His return to Rome, 326. His influence over females of Rome,
St.8. Paula, a disciple of, 330.
His controversies, 231. His retreat to Palestine, 332. With Jovinian and Vigilantius, SS2.

Jerusalem, city of (See Jews, Terple, and Christ), Jesus celebrates the Passover at, i. 164. The holy city was the stronghold of Jewish enthusiasm, 196. Multitudes repairing to, at the Passover, 287, 288. Jesus enters it in triumph, 302. Its destruction of importance to the progress of the Christian dispensation, 319. Sadness of Jesus on the approaching destruction of the holy city, 317. 320. His distinct and minute prophecy thereof, 325. Tyranny of the Roman procurators, 323. Persecution of the primitive Christian church at, 399, 400, et seq. 433. Council of the apostles at, i. 425. The Roman guard, 433, 434. Destruction of the city by Titus, son of Vespasian, 443, 444. Influence of this great calamity on the Jewish nation, 446. ii. 56. Advantageous to the progress of Christianity, i. 444. Destruction of the Jewish polity, 455. The new or [Roman] city interdicted to the Jews, 459. But Christians permitted in Ælia, 459. Persecution in, ii. 40. Became a Christian city under Constantine, 417. Form of Christianity at, 418. Julian attempts to rebuild the Temple, iii. 99. Supernatural fires destroy the new buildings, 101.

Jesuit missionaries to China, i. 99. n. Jesus, see Christ.

Jews, the, and Jerusalem: - Religion of Moses and Judaism, i. 21. 41. 102. n. 111. 146, 147. n. 172. 294. 296. 411. 416. Symbolic presence of the Deity, how long preserved under Judaism, 24. The invisible Deity, 24, 25. n. 65. Expansion of Judaism, 25. 411. The Alexandrian doctrine, 26. 33. 58. 60. 79. Not participators in heathen mysteries, 33. Religious parties and enthusiasm of, 55. 311 -316. They look to the death of Herod as the time for national independence, 56. Their expectation of a deliverer, 57. 74. 76. 81-85. 87. 155. 243. Foreign connexions of the, 60. Their captivity in Babylonia, 61. 111. Reof emigration to Egypt, 61. To Their turn of, from Babylon, 61. Tide Armenia and Asia, 62. Monotheism widely disseminated, Schism of Pharisees and Sadducees, 75. Calamities of, 77. The Judæo-Grecian system, 79. 118. The Law, 59. 81. 133. 135. 292. 449. [See Law.] The Helleuist Jews, 82. State of political confusion at Jerusalem, 85. 94. The royal race of David, 94, 95. 316. Their civil institutions, &c., 99. n. 104. n. Decree of Augustus for enrolment or taxation of, Oath of allegiance to Cæsar, or the reigning emperor, 105. 106. 139. The magi in Jerusa. lem, 87. 110. 112. Jewish fiction relative to the birth of Jesus, 113. n. The festival at Jerusalem, 134. Political revolutions from the Nativity to A. D. 30, 136. The Sanhedrin, 137. 168. 171. 283, &c. See Sanhedrin. The Roman procurators of Judæa, 323. 341. Jews of Arabia, 406. The various races of, 386. et passim. The publicans and farmers of taxes, 137. 290. Insurrections of the Jews, 62. 138. 146. 299. 323. 394. 419. 421. n. 434. 443, et seq. ii. 148. Against Trajan and Hadrian, 59. Celebration of the Passover, i. 163. Reverence for the Temple, 170. 305. 448. pectations of the Jews in the Messiah, disappointed, 168, 170. The Jewish leaders hostile to Jesus, The Sanhedrin and the Pharisaic party resolve on active measures against him, 262, et seq. 282. 325. The Roman com-mander of the band of soldiers, 263. 283. 337. 354. 358. 391. The centurion's testimony of Christ, 365. All sects of Jerusalem bitter enemies of Christ, 291. 311. 441. ii. 22. The restrictions of the Mosaic law not offensive to the nation, i. 292. The Jewish Theocracy, 293. 295. 299. 427. et pas-Intolerance, tyranny, and strict observances of the old religion, 316. et passim. Jesus condemns the bigotry of Jerusalem, 317. The rulers, 298. 303. 309. 323, 325. Christ, the King of the Jews, 304. Ruin of the nation a result of their obstinate fanaticism, 321. 458. Causes of their rejection of Christ, 322. Their persecution and crucifixion of Christ, 333-359. Of the Apostles, 379. 441. Many of the people converted to Christianity by the Apostles, 388. 406. Their separation from the Gentile converts, 449. Caligula persecutes the Jews, 408. Herod Agrippa governs Judæa, 408. Judaism in the first century of the Christian æra, 411. 423. 447. The Roman guard protects St. Paul, 420. Persecutions of the Jewish nation, 429. n. Proselytes to Judaism at Athens, 429. Arts and manufactures of, 430. The Jewish war commenced by Rome, 443. Fall of Jerusalem, 444. The elect people of God, 446. Characかんして とうないかいから こうないかんかん 大神のなる

d t= 3= Ç 💣 🕏 The of his De issue L Posti LL E. . . S. T. H. Later Le - d l-— con of the Jewis pe the war against Rosse. 54. रुक्ष्य कार्यक क्रियान्त र संग्री क कर्ती as a religious community. W. Their elders and pusture, 56. Ju-lius a patron of this nation and of Jermanen, zz. 34. 4 mg. as to the Moune history, i. The Jews and arease to the 129 etresi emperanta. I 45. et par non, wife of Cheen, L 577.

January Bayers, 1.73. Com and burn of . 19. 94. 102. presenting at Bethabura, the ford of the Jorean, 141. Baption of, 142 310. Maintade attes Ha denunciations against 14!. size 145. Director of his momon. 143 As meetic or Emene. 141. 161. His inngringe and style of prescring, 14", 149. His arrowed inferiority to Jesus, 150. 1"5 He becase Jesus 151. Department from Jerowies to. 144, 157. He declares hanself the hartanger of Jesus, 157, 175, 204. Removes his station to waters near Salim, 175. Close of his career, 175. Imprisoned by Herod Antipas, 177, 230. John's testimony of Jesus the Messiah, 154, 173, 219. His message to Jesus, 229. He is beheaded in privm, 239. His disciples, ii. 25, 26.

John, St., his Gospel argumentative in comparison of the three first, i. 54, 163, 174, 179, n. 212, n. 340, n. ii. 103. The constant companion of Jesus, i. 163, 189, 225, n. 363. Teaches the Christian doctrine to the Ephesians, ii. 55, 103. His death, 61, et seq. Jam to himry, ii. 308. Jame, to women, ii. 45. James, nga-gasa, wasinsi ... 450.

James for Williams on the Leabwater. 199. The Moon of 1.55. James the twee — In subset, 19 James to 1.60. 2. In fact, 191. Bancons, 1972. James visits to James of 1978.

Justin of 17%.

Justin Dr. on the second of k on. 1998. He remarks on a committee between 1998. I chemistrati limitary, i. 198, a. Junio, of the royal rane of Davi i. 37. Betterman to Mary, 9. His junyary to Bethichen, 10: His fight rate Leyes, 113. History to Guillen, 125.

- d'Armethea, i. 366.

Junquina. Hartury of the Jevs. St. the more important references at eitstann. 1 25, 60, 61, 85, 10 106 n. 130, 149, n. 176, 29 514, 406, 421, n. 442.

Joinin, automory of St. Jose with in 332

Juditing and Hellenhing Christia L. 119.

Judinson, 1-21, 41, 102, 111, 14 147, n. 415, 425, 425, 445, 45 at any, 456, ii. 1, 52, 521, 56; ni. 59.

Judga, its political state adverse! the new religion. i. 53. Reign Herod the Great, 54. Roma jealousy excited by the Jevis expectation of a deliverer, 57. L vitical cities of 98. The Messi expected as a great king over 114. 156. 155. Reduced to Roman province, 137. The Re man tribute, 137, n. Its topography, 156. The Apostles in, 38 Famine in the time of Claudiu 410. 421. Roman præfects goven 137, 139, 263, 323, 326, 399, 1 Succinct account of various of the procurators or præfects of, 411 419. Authority of the Young Agrippa in, 440.

Judas, brother of James, also a Apostle, i. 226.

Judas the Gaulonite, or Galilean, 138, 204, 249, 297, 312, 394, i 39. n. Insurrections by his sons, i. 419.

Judas Iscariot, i. 227. 245. 302. Disquisition on his betrayal of his Master, 326, et seq. His remorse and suicide, 344.

Jude, St., brother of our Lord, ii. 58. Trial and release of the grandsons of, 58.

Judgment, day of final, i. 431. n. ii. 37.

Julian, the Emperor, ii. 235. 267. iii. 49. He rules over the whole empire, 50. His character, 51. What called the new religion of, 53. His education, 56. stantius jealous of this Conyoung prince, 57. His acquaintance with the philosophers, 58. Athens, 62. At Eleusis, 63. Is declared Cæsar, 65. Assumes the title of emperor, 65. His apostasy, 65. Embraces the eclectic paganism of the new Platonic philosophy, 66. Restores the pagan worship. 68. He misappre-hended the influence of Christianity, 70. His new priesthood, 72. Charitable institutions, 73. His ritual, 74. Respect for temples, 74. Institutes new sacrifices of animals, 75. His toleration, 80. Sarcastic tone of, 81. He taunts the Christian profession of poverty, 82. Confiscations by, 82. Withdraws the Christian privileges, exemptions, and grants made to them, 82. Education under, 75. 82, 83. Edict of, 84. His endeavour to undermine Christianity, 86. Persecution, 87. The emperor contends on ill-chosen ground, 88. He visits Antioch, 90. He courts the Jews. 98. His attempt to rebuild the temple at Jerusalem, baffled by mysterious flames, 99, et seq. His writings, 102-104. The emperor marches against Persia, 105. Is slain, 105. His celebrated apostrophe to Jesus of Galilee, 105. The emperor's character, 106.

Jovian, the Emperor, iii. 110. Jupiter Capitolinus, i. 6. ii. 55. ——— Olympius, ii. 153. Jupiter Optimus Maximus, ii. 267.
Stator, i. 20.

Philius, ii. 291. iii. 91.

——, Temples of, ii. 189. 153.

Tonans, his statue on the Julian Alps, iii. 173.

Justin Martyr, his Apology for Christianity, ii. 182. His avowal of Christianity and death, 183.

Justina, the Empress, inimical to Ambrose, Bishop of Milan, iii. 246, et seq.

Justinian, laws of, iii. 399.

Juvenal on astrology, i. 43. On the Christians of Rome, ii. 38. n.

KABAITES, the, a Jewish sect, i. 292. Kedron, Brook of, i. 331.

Kingdom of Heaven, declarations of the, i. 79. n. 145. 203, 204. 290. Kingdom of the Messiah, i. 294.

306. 316. 330. 412.

Khosrov I., reign of, ii. 319. Is murdered by Ansh, 319, 320.

Klaproth, M., writings of, i. 98. n. Knowledge, progress of, its influence on religion, i. 26. When beneficial, 27. Prejudicial, 28.

LABARUM, the, inquiry as to, ii. 352. et seq. 356. 388.

Laberius, mimes of, iii. 451.

Lactantius, appointed preceptor of Crispus, ii. 384.

Letus, the præfect, ii. 209.

Laity, the, i. 48. ii. 76. iii. 363. Language, effects of Christianity on.

iii. 192. Of the Old Testament, 363.

Languages, various, in use at Jerusalem, i. 386. 493. The Oriental, and even the Latin, in disuse, iii. 39, 40. The Gothic, 136. Greek, 463. Latin, 469.

Laodicea, Church of, ii. 168.

Lapsi, certain fallen Christians denominated the, ii. 243.

Lardner, Dr., i. 105, n. 106, n. 234, n. 442, n. ii. 193, n. 325, n. 328, n. 333, n.

Lateran palace and basilica, ii. 361.

The first patrimony of the popes, 361.

Latin became the language of Christian divines, iii. 263.

Lucretius, an admirer of Epicurus, i. 42. ii. 18.

Luke, St., author of the Acts of the Apostles, ii. 41. 98.

Luke, St., Gospel of, i. 105. n. 106. n. 109. 248. 421. n. His Gospel, how altered by Marcion, ii. 129.

Lunacy, dæmoniacs, supposed to be affected by, i. 89. 223. 234. n. 239.

Lupercalia, Festival of the, suppressed, iii. 183.

Lycaonia, province of, barbarous, i.

Lydia, conversion of at Thyatira, ii. 12. Lydus de Ostentis and the ancient Roman ritual, i. 4. n. Lyons and Vienne, Christians persecuted at, ii. 193. Church of, 213. n. Lysias, Roman commander at Jerusalem, i. 434. Lystra, city of, St. Paul nearly murdered by the people of, i. 424. Paul and Timothy at, 428. ii. 9. 13.

MACCABEES, Book of, i. 78. n. 94.

Maccabeus, Judas, i. 279. n.

Macedonia, the Gospel preached by Paul in, i. 429. 432. ii. 31.

Macedonius, bishop of Constantinople, iii. 44.

Macedonians, the, 187.

Macknight, Dr., his remarks, i. 269. Machærus, fortress of, i. 229. 240. n. Macrianus, ii. 246.

Mæso-Gothic alphabet, the, iii. 136. Magdala and Dalmanutha, Jesus visits, i. 254.

Magi, the, i. 15. 40. 65. 68. 71. 111. ii. 311. Their tenets, how far coincident with Scripture, i. 66. They repair to Bethlehem, 87. 110. Summary of the re-establishment of the Magian worship and hierarchy, ii. 310 - 318. Mani disputes with the Magians, and is flayed alive, 337.

Magic, Oriental, ii. 231. 245. 359. Magicians, i. 416. 422. ii. 7. n. 24. 26. 96, et seq. 153. 231. 246, iii. 58. Prosecutions for magic, 112. 114.

Magna Græcia, colonies and republics in Sicily, Italy, &c., ii. 90.

Magnentius, defeated at Mursa, iii. 18, 19. n. The usurper, 21, 22. Mahomet, religion of, i. 68. n. ii.

81. Tomb of, at Mecca, i. 166. Paradise of, i. 314. Koran of, ii. 231. Monachism, iii. 289.

Mai, Angelo, i. 36. n. ii. 230. n. Maia, the goddess, i. 99. n.

Majorinus, elected bishop of Car-thage, ii. 369, et seq.

Malachi, Book of, i. 93. 144.

Malchus, his ear cut off by Peter, and restored and healed by the Saviour, i. 333.

Malefactors, the two, crucified with Jesus, i. 361. The penitent, 361. Mamertinus, quoted, iii. 89.

Mammæa, the mother of Alexander Severus, ii. 230.

Man a religious being, i. 8. primæval state, 9. n. Distinct races of, 13. n. Human sacrifices, Distinct 27. Doctrine of the two races of, Regenerated man, 172. The 78. human nature, 51. 373. Christianity the moral history of man, 453. Fall of, ii. 110. False notions of the origin of, 113. Gnostic manifestations of Anthropos and Ecclesia, 120. Ideas respecting the first, 324. 329. Man requires authorised interpreters of the mysterious revelations from heaven, iii. 355.

Mani, religion of, ii. 317. 322-337. He is flayed, 337.

Manicheism, details of, ii. 322, et seg. iii. 142.

Manes, heresiarch, i. 64. ii. 80.

-, the, and Lemures, i. 21. Manichæan doctrines, i. 69. n. iii. 142. 268. 274.

Manua, the, i. 242.

Manners and general habits influenced by Christianity, iii. 134. Of the Roman court, 345. the aristocracy, 349. Dress of females, 350. Character of Roman women, 329. Manners of ancient Rome, 351.

Maximinians, the sect of Donatists called, ii. 379.

Maximus, the usurper, iii. 254. 261, 262.

The most eminent in the reign of Julian, 78. His wife sets him an example of taking poison, and dies, 122. He chooses to live, 122. But is executed at Ephesus, 122.

the cynic, a rival of Bishop Gregory at Constantinople, iii. 202.

_____, Tyrius, i. 18. 30. n.

Mead, Dr., i. 234. n. Mecca, pilgrimage to, i. 166. 287. The Caaba, i. 206.

Mede, Joseph, opinion of, i. 234. n. Medes, the, i. 67.

Mediator, doctrine of a, i. 72. 83. 92. 207. ii. 427.

Mediterranean, navigation of, by St. Paul, ii. 32.

Meekness and humility approved of God, i. 203, 204.

Meletians, sect of the, ii. 433.

Meletius, bishop of Lycopolis, ii. 433.

, bishop of Antioch, iii. 207.

Melita, St. Paul admired as a god in the island of, ii. 32.

Memra, the, or Divine Word, i. 74.

Menander, the poet, i. 37. ii. 16. iii. 449.

Menander, disciple and successor of Simon Magus, ii. 101. His disciples, 112. 115.

Mensurius, Bishop of Carthage, ii. 367.

Merobaudes, poem of, iii. 180.

Mesopotamia, Jews in, i. 61. 63. St. Peter's preaching in, 63. State of, ii. 148. 317.

Messiah, the, general expectation of, i. 56. Nature of the belief in the, 58. 74. 76. 180. The expectation national in Palestine, 77. 106. 145. 155. 173. Reign of the, according to the Alexandrian Jews, i. 81. ii. 102. A reformer and king, i. 83. The Prince of Peace, 84. Popular belief of a, 84. Birth of Christ, 87. 98. 107. Jesus designated by John as, 158. 173. 219. 229. The twofold,—the VOL. III.

son of Joseph, suffering; and the son of David, triumphant, 159. n. 388. 454. Question, at that time, of Jesus being the Messiah, 244. n. 255. 264. 280. 295. 388. 393. 412. Signs of the coming of, 290. 454. Jesus declares himself to be the, 337. The days of the Messiah begun, 388. Notions of, as promulgated by Marcion, ii. 128.

Michael, the Archangel, i. 70. n.

Michaelis, observations of, i. 145. n. 365. 399. n. ii. 105.

Milan, decree of Constantine, ii. 356, 357. n. Council of, iii. 16. 20. 22. Hilary, Bishop of, 32. 36. n. 42. Christians put to death at, 115. n. St. Ambrose, Bishop of, 241—260. See Ambrose.

Miletus, St. Paul at, ii. 31. 41. Mill, Mr., History of India by, i.

Mili, Mr., History of India by, i.

16. n.

Millownium Ab. : 50

Millennium, the, i. 79. n. 455. ii. 107. 165. Fertility of the earth in the, i. 456. n.

Milton, his poems quoted, i. 81. His Hymn on the Nativity, i. 109. n. Milvian Bridge, battle of the, ii. 355. Mimes and pantomimes, iii. 450, 451. Mind impersonated, Asiatic notions of, ii. 84. Doctrine of purity of, 84. Gnostic idea of a presiding Mind, or self-developed Nous, 116. 119. 120. Moral aberrations of, iii. 5. Imaginative state of the human, 533. Minerva, ii. 227.

Minucius Felix, ii. 235. iii. 477.

Miracles, recorded in the Old Testament, considerations on the, i. 23. 242. n. ii. 27. Of our Saviour, i. 161. 165. 169. 184. 197. 208. 215. 219. 227. 229. 234. 238. 241. 254. 269. 283. Supposed modern miracles, ii. 175. n. 190. 352, et seq. iii. 101. 252.

Mischna, the, a Jewish code, ii. 66. 'Misopogon,' by the Emperor Julian, iii. 104.

Mithra, worship of, ii. 145.

Mithraic rites, the, i. 28. n. 41. ii. 10. 139. iii. 177.

Moloch, worship of, i. 64.

i. 91.

Ionachism introduced by St. Jerome in the West, iii. 285, 289. Its origin, 291. Causes which tended to promote, 294. Its effects on Christianity, 311. On political affairs, 312. Its advantages, 314. On the maintenance of Christianity, 316. On the clergy, 319. In promoting celibacy, 320. Monad, the, of the Carpocratians, ii.

130.

Monasteries, iii. 128, 209.

Monastic institutions, early, i. 161. ii. 86. System, iii. 285. Dangers, 307. Bigotry, 307. Fanaticism, 308. Ignorance, 309.

Monica, mother of St. Augustine,

lii. 273, 275,

Monks, origin of, ii. 86-95. Compelled to military service by the emperor Valens, iii, 128. Most active in destroying temples, idols, and vestiges of Paganism, 145. Of Alexandria, 159. Of Canopus, 160. Of Antioch, 215.

Montanists, the, ii. 212.

Montanus, heresy of, ii. 213, et aeq Moon, worshipped as Astarte, &c.

i. 64. Moral element of the ancient Roman religion, i. 20. Moral government by the Deity, i. 23.

Moral meaning attributed to the Mosaic record by the Alexandrian school, i. 26.

Moral science of Rome, i. 36.

Moral history of man, i. 453. Moral and temporal character of the Messiah, i. 455.

Moral perfection, ii. 84.

Moral more slow than religious revolution, iii. 4.

Morality, the rise of Christianity effeeted a revolution in the ancient state of, i. 9. Its ideal perfection found in Christianity, 51. Principles of Christian morality, 201. 227. Its universality, 205. original principles, 206. Of heathenism, in the doctrine of Seneca and Marcus Antoninus, ii. 23. Relaxation of Christian morals, 261.

Moriah, Mount, Jewish temple on, i. 78. 179. 319. Heathen temple built on, 458.

Moses, miracles of, i. 242. n. Tradition of his reappearing in ti time of the Messiah, i. 257. H Council of Seventy, i. 278. Bod of, i. 314. Mosaic religion, doctrine of Unit

The one great God, 2 293, 411, 416, Certain and gies of, with the doctrines of I roaster 66, 69. The Law, 59.5 104. n. 142. 192. 204. 292. 55 403. 447. Commandments, 2 The Law abrogated by the Chr tian dispensation, and the result the Gospel doctrine, 416.425. ii Its claim to a perpetual author refuted by St. Paul, 453. Al sions to the Mosaic history, I: 129.

Mosheim, opinions of, or quetation from, i. 69. n. 70. n. 202, 390. ii. 45. n. 63. n. 113. n. 131.

155. n. 354. n. 458. Moyle's works, ii. 175. n.

Mummius, the consul, destroys (rinth, i. 429. n. ii. 21. n.

Municipal institutions promoted Christianity, iii. 132, Mursa, battle of, iii. 18.

Music, church, iii. 518. Mylitta, heathen divinity, i. 64.

Mysteries the last support of Paga ism, i. 31. The Eleusinian, 3 ii. 20. Philo asks, if such a useful, why not public? i. 33. Iamblichus wrote on the, ii. 23 Osirian, or Bacchie, iii. 153.

Mysticism of the Essenian obser ances, i. 162. Asiatic, ii. 24. 9 Of the later times of Rome, 237 Mythology brought on the scene, i 452.

NAIN, town of, the widow's son raise i. 229.

Natural Religion, i. 12, 14. Nature, the goddess Diana an it personation of, ii. 103. n. Nature-worship, on, i. 12. Vivil ing power of, 13. Ancient syr bolic forms of, 31. Taught t Immortality of the Soul, 33. Do trine of the divine essence 4 Astral worship, a branch of, 6 A pontiff of this superstition vis

Nathanael, convinced by Jesus, b

Rome, ii. 225.

comes his disciple, i. 160. His blameless character, 226.

Nazarenes, the, contemned Jesus of Nazareth, i. 185. He evades their offered violence, 187. The Nazaritish practice of abstinence, 442. n. Christians, by some, called, 457.

Nazareth, town of, i. 95. 103. 140. 184. 187. Jesus teaches in the synagogue at, i. 185, 186.

Nazarites, the, and the ascetics, i. 29. Neander, the Life of Christ, by, i. 34. 102. n. 105. n. 108. n. 120. 151. n. 235. n. 383. n.

Nebuchadnezzar, conquests of, i. 66. n. 157.

Necessity, doctrine of, ii. 19.

Nehemiah, i. 61.

Nergal-sharezer, the Archimagus, i. 66. n.

Nero, the emperor, i. 439. n. The burning of Rome, ii. 34. 171. n. Persecution by, 42, et seq. 45. n. 51. 145. Styled Antichrist in the Sybilline verses, 171. n.

Nerva, the emperor, ii. 61.

Nestorian tenets, i. 99. n. ii. 81. 316. iii. 188.

Neuman, Professor, his translation of Vartan, i. 68. n.

Nice, Council of, ii. 390. 397. 422.

Nicene Creed, the, comparison of Mani's theory with, ii. 325. 331. The Creed, 442. The Homoousion, 443. iii. 9. 201. Opinions, iii. 11. 43.

Nicodemus, his discourse with Jesus, i. 171-174. 213.

Nicolaitans, their opposition to St. John the Evangelist, ii. 105.

Nicomedia, the residence of Dioclesian, ii. 264. 304. His edict of persecution executed at, 274. Torn down by a Christian, 275. The palace on fire, 276. Consequences severe on the Christians, 277. Julian at, iii. 57.

Nicopolis, ii. 41.

Niger, Pescennius, ii. 207.

Nile, River, iii. 151. The Nilometer kept in the Temple of Serapis at Alexandria, 151. 158.

Nino converts the Georgians, or Iberians, ii. 480.

Noetus and the Patripassians, ii. 429. Nous or Mind, the Self-manifested, ii. 119.

Novation heresy, the, ii. 244. n. Nubia, converts made by Frumen-tius in, ii. 479. Numa Pompilius, i. 39.

Numerian, the Emperor, murder of, ii. 268.

Numidicus, martyrdom of, iii. 384.

Odin, Valhalla of, i. 46.

Olives, the Mount of, i. 303. 331.

Olivet, Jesus on Mount, 317. Whence he views Jerusalem and the Temple, 318. The ascension from, 383. Church on the spot, ii. 419.

Olympus, of Alexandria, iii. 154, et seq.

_____, gods of, ii. 405.

Onager, termed the wild ass, iii. 18. Onesiphorus of Ephesus, ii. 41.

Ophites, the, or worshippers of the serpent, ii. 131, et seq.

Optatus, works of, and important documents appended, ii. 366. n. 374. n.

Oracles, i. 27. n. 41. ii. 164-168. 268. 273. 285. 349. iii. 120. n. Orations of the Fathers, iii. 484.

Oratory, Christian, and orations, iii. 475. 479.

Orgiasm described, ii. 213.

Oriental literature, i. 10. n. 68. n. 74. n. ii. 310. n. Allegory, i. 152. ii. 84. Asceticism, i. 162. ii. 86 – 95. 335. Religions, i. 5. 12. 15. 22. 40. 64. 68. 74. 79. 98. 172. 296. 413. ii. 83. 310—317. 222—340. iii. 189.

Orientalism, conflict of Christianity with, ii. 80. 323. 407. Of Western Asia, 92. Tenet of the Great Supreme, 119. 328. Symbolism, 326.

Origen, writings and opinions of, i. 113. n. 151. n. 460. ii. 98. n. 236. iii. 189. Against Celsus, 476. He was subjected to torture, ii. 243. Ormuzd, Oromazd, or Aramazt, worship of, ii. 315. 321. 330.

Orthodoxy, iii. 6. 37. 42. n. 96. 125 143. 205, et passim. Osiris and Isis, mythologic dualism

P P 2

Barnabas, he associates Silas in his missionary labours, 428. Gains livelihood as a tent-maker, 430. Third journey of, 431. ii. 24. His miracles, i. 431, et passim. His deportment in the Temple at Jerusalem, 433. Charge against him of violating the sanctity of the Temple, 433. Is scourged by Lysias, 435. He claims to be a Roman citizen, 435. Sanhedrin, 435. 437. Before the Before Felix, 438. He preaches the Resurrection, 437. His declaration to Festus that he appealed to Cæsar, 439. He perseveres in this appeal, when before the younger Agrippa, 440. And is sent prisoner to Rome, In what doctrines opposed to St. Peter, 450. Who the adversaries of Paul, 451. 459. To the Corinthians, on meats used in sacrifices, &c., ii. 3. The Apostle, in prison at Philippi, converts the jailer, 13. Is driven out of Thessalonica and Beræs, 14. Athens he declares the Unknown God of the Greeks to be the God of Abraham, 15-18. He preaches the Resurrection to the Athenians, 19. At Corinth, 22. 70. n. At Ephesus, 24-30. 70. n. The parting of the Christians of Asia Minor with the Apostle, 31. His long and perilous voyage to Rome, 32. Reception of Paul by the Christian Church of Rome, 32. Notices of the Apostle's personal history, 34. 39. 88. n. Author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, 40. n. His authority not generally recognised by the Church, 75. Martyrdom of, 42, et seq. 46. Maxim of, iii. 48.

Paul, an insurgent chief so named, i. 434.

a claimant of the see of Constantinople, iii. 12. Conflicts in the capital, 12. Paul expelled, 13. Is deposed, 20. His death, 20. and Macurius defeat the circumcellions at Bagnia, ii. 379.

of Samosata, bishop of Antioch, ii. 255. His magnificence, 256. His quarrel with the synod, &c., 257, et seq. iii. 521.

Paula, the fervent disciple of St. Jerome, iii. 330. Paulinus, bishop of Antioch, iii. 44. of Nola, poems of, iii. 440. Paulus, Professor, i. 115. Pausanias, his respect for religion, i. 39, 40. Peace on earth, i. 108. 144. n. Pearson, Bishop, on the Creed, i. 159. n. His 'Opera Posthuma,' ii. 44. n. iii. 361. Pelagian heresy, the, iii. 188. 267. Pelagius, doctrines of, iii. 270. Pella, town of the Trans-Jordanic province, i. 444. The Judgeo-Christian community seeking refuge at, 459. Penates or household gods of Rome, ii. 4. 403. Pentecost, Feast of, i. 248. 254. 383. -, day of, gift of tongues, i. 385.

Peræa, territory of, i. 175. 195. Perdition, iii. 269. Perga in Pamphylia, i. 422.

Perpetua and Felicitas, martyrdom of, ii. 216-225.

Persecutions of the early Christian Church, u. 38. 42. The Neronian, 51. By Trajan, 141. 143. 150. By Marcus Aurelius, 159. 182, et seq. At Vienne, 193, et By later emperors, 207. seq. 216-225. By Decius, 242. By Valerian, 245, et seq. By Aurelian, The tenth, by Dioclesian, 259, et seq. By Galerius, 272-By Maximin, 291. 366. 285. In Persia and Armenia, 316, 317. In Africa, 246-253. 366.

Persia, traditions of, i. 5. n. 67. The Magi, 15. 40. 65 Immaterial fire worshipped in, 22. The Medo-Persian dynasty, 67. n. A Messiah expected by the Persians, 77. n. The Dualism of, ii, 83. The later Persian kingdom raised on the ruins of the Parthian, 81. Ancient religion of, i. 15. 22. 65. 69. 111. ii. 113. 310. 312. 326. Reign of Ardeschir Babhegan, 312. His edict, 316. Destruction of Christianity in, 316. His acquisition of Armenia, 320. Persian war, iii. 18. 141. Defeat of Julian, 105.

tribunal, 290. His decision of character, 298. 343. Jesus brought before, 343. Detail of his examination by, 344—350. This præfect proposed to the Jews the release of Jesus, 353. The wife of Pilate intercedes for mercy toward Jesus, 355. Pilate reluctantly delivers Jesus to death, 356. Character of his administration, 399. n. False acts of, ii. 289.

Pilgrimage to the Holy Land, iii. 286, et seq.

Plato on the Deity, i. 34. ii. 427. On immortality, i. 40. iii. 67. His philosophic system, i. 79, 80. ii. 17. 90. On the Logos, 427.

Platonism early blended with Judaism, by Aristobulus and Philo, i. 26. n. Brahmin doctrine similar to, 34. Platonic Judaism, 73. 80. Platonic Christianity of Alexandria, 413. ii. 427. Platonic Paganism, 80. 104. 209. 268. The new system of, 237. iii. 66.

Pleroma, the, or fulness of the Godhead, ii. 108. 119. The inviolable circle of the, 120.

Plinius Secundus, his letters to Trajan on the Christians, ii. 140,141.n.
The emperor's reply to his minister, 141. Christians put to death by Pliny, 143. Probable connection of this persecution with the state of the East, 148.

Plutarch, remarkable passage in, i. 37.
Poets, ancient, priests of the mythologic system, i. 13. The heather religion converted into mere poetry, 26. Poetry ceases to be religious, 42. Poetic age of Greece, 79.
Poetry, how far discernible in the Gospel, 131. The Greek philosophical poets, ii. 16. iii. 79.
Poetry of the Gnostics, ii. 124.
Poetical predictions at Rome, 167.
—173. Characteristic difference of Greek and of Christian poetry, iii. 197. In Latin, 466, et seq.
Polemical writings, iii. 475. 478.
Pollio. Virgil's, founded on Hebrew

Pollio, Virgil's, founded on Hebrew prophecy, ii. 166. n. Polybius, on his use of mythological legends, i. 37. On religion, 38. Polycarp, martyrdom of, ii. 184. Polytheism relaxed its influence preparatory to the Christian dispensation, i. 24. Effects of the progress of knowledge on, 26. Decline of, Ceremonies, processions, and spectacles of, ii. 2. 265. It resists the encroachment of the new faith more by popular and political support than by moral and religious influence, 4. Observations on, by the Author of this History, quoted from the Bampton Lectures, 6. n. Contrast of, at Athens, Philippi, and Lystra, 13. At Rome, 138. 145. 237. 267. Restoration of, iii. 68, et seq.

Pompey astonished in the Temple at Jerusalem, i. 24. Consults the Chaldean astrologers, 43.

Pontiff, title of Christian, ii. 78.

Pontiffs, the Patricians of Rome aspired to be, ii. 5. 356. 364.

Pontius, Life of St. Cyprian by, ii. 250. n. 251. n.

Popes, the, grant of the Lateran palace to, by Constantine, ii. 361. Successors of St. Peter, iii. 42. n. See Rome, and Patrimony of St. Peter.

Porphyrius, his Treatise on the Cave of the Nymphs, in the Odyssey, ii. 238.

Porson, Professor, ii. 341.

Pothinus, bishop of Lyons, death of, ii. 196.

Praxiteles, ii. 405.

Præternatural interpositions, belief in, i. 88.

ii. 353. 356.

Prætextatus, proconsul of Achaia, iii. 111.

Test problem of the Church, iii. Agorius, iii. 163. 167. His title of supreme pontiff, 162. His wife also the priestess, 164. His death, 163. funeral and apotheosis of, 164. Predestination, doctrine of, iii. 269. Presbyters of the Church, ii. 64. 72. College of, iii. 363. n.

Prescience of God, iii. 268.

Prideaux, Dr., i. 66.

Priesthood, Jewish, deputation of, concerning the pretensions of John the Baptist, i. 148. See High-Priests.

-, of heathen and pagan

P P 4

411. Is the basis of religion, 371. The Sadducees denied it, 392. Retribution, future, i. 25. ii. 19. iii. 264.

Revelation, Jesus promulgates a new, i. 191. Rhetoric, iii. 480.

Rimini, council of, iii. 45.

Rites of superstition, the immoral, chiefly Oriental, i. 28. n. 427. ii. 51. 131.

Roman Catholics charged with the gunpowder plot, and the fire of London, ii. 45. n.

Rome, reign of Augustus Cæsar, i. 1. Civilisation of, 2. Worship of Jupiter Capitolinus, 6. Religious mystery, 6. Book of Laws, 6. The Romans rejected the obscene fables of the Greek superstition, 18. n. Priests, augurs, and aruspices of, 19. Deities of, allegorical, 19. Moral element of the religion of, 20. Sanguinary spectacles of, 27. n. Roman pride supported heathen worship, 29. Its philosophy similar to that of the Stoics, 35. The Haruspices, 37. Reception of foreign religions in, 40. Christianity gradually subverts the Imperial government of, 48. Controversy on the question as to Rome or Babylon, (First Epistle of St. Peter, v. 13.) 63. n. ii. 37. Fable of Lupa (Romulus and Remus), i. 100. Laws of, and Remus), i. 100. 142. Dominion over the Jewish nation, 298. 312. 323. 341. 418. 494. The Jews incur the vengeance of, 321, et seq. 408. 419. Spread of Christianity throughout the empire, 411. Proconsuls and proprætors, i. 421, n. The Christran Church at, whether founded by the Apostles, 430. 451. n. St. Paul at, 440. Rights of citizenship of, 439. Details of the Jewish war, and destruction of Jerusalem, 443. Roman converts to Christianity, 452, et seq. Both Jews and Christians driven from the Imperial city, 452. ii. 31. Paganism an integral part of state politics at, 5. The heathen ponpolitics at, 5. The heathen pon-tiffs, 5. 356. Innovations hostile to the state religion, considered as treason against the majesty of Rome, 5. Roman population of Corinth, 21. 31. St. Paul's voyage, and arrival in, 32, et seq. Burning of, in the reign of Nero, 34. 45. n. 51. 53. Jewish population of, 35. Persecutions of Christians at, 42. 141. Fame of St. Peter in the Western Church, 43. perial history of, divided into four periods, 49. To the death of periods, 49. To the death of Nero, 50. To the accession of The third period, Trajan, 53. The fourth period, 139—199. Reign of Trajan, 49. 199, et seq. 59. 136. 139. 141. Tyranny and vices of Domitian, 54. Spirit of ancient liberty more suspected by Vespasian than the new creed, 55. No ascetic or cenobitic institutions appertaining to ancient Rome, 89. 91. The emperors at the commencement of the second century, 136. Extent of the empire, 136. Christians persecuted by Trajan, 141. By Marcus Aurelius, 159. State of the eastern dominions of Rome, 148. 292-297. nection of Christianity with the fall of the Roman Empire, 163. Prediction of the fall of, 169. Change in the circumstances of the times, respecting Christianity, 173. State of peace, 173. Terror of the Roman world, 174. The Christians reckoned the cause of approaching calamities, 175. Earthquakes and calamities, 179, 180, et seq. Pestilence, 180. 295. Rapid succession of emperors of, 199, et seq. 240. The Palladium, 227. 408. Decius persecutes the Christians, 241, et seq. Reign of Dioclesian, 259, et seq. Change in the state of the empire, 262. Change 303. 308. 303. 308. Citizenship, 263. n. 304. Taxation, 263. n. Neglect of Rome by the later emperors, 263. General misery, 281. Persecution by Maximin, 291. Pagans boast of the flourishing state of the East, 292. Calamities and famine of the eastern empire, 293, 294. Reign of Con-Pestilence, 295. Degradation of stantine, 303. the ancient capital, 303. Unity of the empire preserved, 305, 306.

Sanhedrin, the, i. 137. 154. 157. n. 168. 171. 221. 262, et seq. 290. Their persecution of Jesus, 272. 303. 335. Question of this tribunal being competent to condemn Jesus to death, 339. Its relation to the executive government, 340. The Rulers charge Jesus with blasphemy, 354. And press Pilate to prove himself a friend to Tiberius Cæsar by condemning the King of the Jews, 356. Conduct, and affairs, of this religious Council subsequent to the Resurrection of Christ, 382. 384. 390. 397. 435. Revolution in the, 392. re-assert their power over life and death, 441. Flight of, and establishment at Tiberias, 444. Of the Samaritans, 183.

Sapores, reign of, ii. 327.

Sardica, Council of, iii. 15. 42.

Sasima, Gregory, Bishop of, iii. 199. Satan, exorcisms addressed to, i.

235. n. ii. 113.
Saturninus of Antioch, ii. 108. A Gnostic disciple of Simon Magus and Menander, 112.

Saul [St. Paul], a disciple of Gamaliel the Pharisee, i. 394. His miraculous conversion, on the road to Damascus, 403. See St. Paul. Savigny, M. de, opinions of, or citations from, i. 107. n. Scaliger, biblical criticisms of, i.

442. n. Sceva, sons of the High Priest, i. 431. ii. 27.

Schlegel, A. W., observations of, i. 14. n.

Scipio, maxim of, ii. 157.

Scribes, the, i. 190. 315. 442. n.

Scripture, authority of, appealed to by Jesus, i. 167. Jesus familiar with, and constantly alluding to, 191. In Gothic, the version of Ulphilas, iii. 136. Version of, by Jerome, 288. 336.

Sculpture, art of, subservient to heathen superstition, i. 26. ii. 2. 103. n. 153. 405. As connected with the Church, iii. 493.

Scythians, rude worship and deities of the, ii. 311. 321.

Seasons, the, ceremonies dependent on, i. 13. Seleucia, city of, i. 63. n. ii. 180. Seneca, i. 29. n. 36. ii. 8. 38. 92. The correspondence, of, with St. Paul, a forgery, 23. n. Septuagint, Greek text interpolated,

i. 33. n. 71.
 Sepulchre, the Holy, i. 366, et seq.
 The women at the, 376. Temple of Aphrodite, over, ii. 417. Chris tian Church of the, 419.

Serapis, worship of, i. 7. 41. ii. 7. n.
169. 208. iii. 124. The Serapeum, or Temple of, destroyed by Theodosius, ii. 168. iii. 150, et seq. Sergius Paulus, his admiration of the doctrine of Paul and Barnabas, i. 421, 422. ii. 8.

Sermon on the Mount, Christ's, i. 192, n. 201, 227.

Sermons of the Fathers, iii. 484. Of the Christian divines, 475. 479.

Serpent, the Old, ii. 110. The Ophites, or worshippers of the, 131. Ophis, considered as Satan, 132. And by some as Christ, 132. Seventy, the disciples, commissioned by Jesus, i. 278.

Severus, reign of, ii. 205. His visit to, and persecutions in, Egypt, 207, Alexander, the Emperor, ii. 201. 230, et seg.

Shah-poor, or Sapores, reign of, ii. 327.

Shechinah, notion of a visible, i. 22. Shibboleth, the, i. 183.

Shiloh, coming of the, i. 57.

Shrines, silver, of Ephesus, ii. 24. 29. Sibylline Books, the, ii. 165, 166. n. 167. 169. 171. n. 255. 349.

Sichem, well of, the Samaritan woman at the, i. 178. This city named Sichar by the Jews, 178.

Sicily, temples in, to the Mother of the Gods, iii. 182.

Sidon, city of, i. 250.

Siloah, fountain and brook of, i. 264. Silas accompanies Paulinto Syria, &c., i. 428. 431. n. ii. 10.

Simeon, Song of, i. 102. n. 109. iii. 301. n. His benediction of Jesus, i. 110.

, father of Gamaliel, i. 109,

, bishop of Jerusalem, ii. 150. Simon the Cyrenian, ii. 118.

INDEX. 589

Supper, the Last, partaking of the Body and Blood of the Redeemer, i. 329, et seq. ii. 77. 335. iii. 428. Swine, Legion dismissed into the herd of, i. 238.

Symbolism, belonging to the Church, iii. 498.

Symmachus, his oration to Theodosius, i. 29. n. His Apology, iii. 169. Replied to by Ambrose, 171. His fresh instances for the restoration of the statue of Victory, 178. His contest with Ambrose farther alluded to, 251. On the Amphitheatre, 456.

Symphorian, St., Acts of, ii. 176. n. Synagogue, the, i. 82. 424. 426. n. 430. 448. ii. 2. 25. 65. 67 At Corinth, 22.

Synesius, Acts of, iii. 405, 406.

Syria, a Roman province, i. 137. 406. Christian converts throughout, 411. 428. Jewish population of, 421. Religion of, antecedent to Christianity, 64. 427. Syrian Greeks, 195. Syrian Christians, ii. 290. Syrian Goddess worshipped, i. 427. n. ii. 227. Hymns of the Syrian Christians, 123. Church of, 435. 449. Persecutions in, 207. iii. 87. Temples destroyed, 148. Monks, 296.

Syrianus, the Duke, his conduct at Alexandria in Egypt, iii. 26. Syro-Phœnician woman's daughter,

i, 250.

TABERNACLE, the, i. 157.
Tabernacles, Feast of the, i. 257. 260.
Tabor, Mount, the Transfiguration on, i. 257.

Tacitus speaks of the astrologers, i.
44. Of Judæa, 57. 147. Of the Jews and Christians, ii. 35. n.
37. n. 38. n. 50. n. 53.

Talismans, amulets, and spells, ii. 24—28.

Talmud, the Babylonian, i. 63. Jewish traditions in the, 120. The Jewish Talmud, 146. n. 147. n. 179. 329. n. ii. 66. iii. 365. Compendium of the, by Pinner, i. 193. Targum, the, or Comments on Scripture, i. 60.

Tarsus, the city of, i. 401, 402. n.

Tartars, the, ii. 311. 315.

Telemachus, the monk, his death in the Amphitheatre, iii. 458.

Temple, the, of Solomon, i. 24. 157. The later Temple, 62. 154. 177. 248. 299. 387. 397. 408. The Holy of Holies, 90. 449. 458. The Temple become a mart, 165. Jesus drives out the traders, 167. 308. The Treasury of the, 166. n. 266. 316. 345. Jesus's declaration of raising the Temple again in three days, figurative, 169. He teaches in the, 261. 311. Its Porticoes described, 280. Christ heals the sick in, 305. The Court of the Gentiles, 305. 433. The Court of Israel, 306. Lament of Christ over this magnificent edifice, 317. 320. Necessity of its destruction, 319. The Inner Court, 357. n. Primitive Christians still resorted to the Temple, 424. 426. n. 442. n. The Gazith, chamber of assembly of the Sanhedrin, 435. Its destruction by Vespasian's army, 444. The Temple service, ii. 1. 67. The ancient Temple tax, levied by Vspasian for the restoration of the Temple of Jupiter Capitolinus, 55. The Emperor Julian attempts to rebuild it, iii. 98, et seq.

Temples, Heathen, destroyed by Xerxes, i. 5. n. Destroyed by Marcellus in Sicily, 6. n. Of ancient Rome, 6. 20. On Mount Moriah, 458. Considered as desecrated by the Christian office, ii. 2. Converted into Christian churches, 2. The celebrated fane of Ephesus, 6. n. 24. 29. 103. Of the Sun at Sirmium, 255. built by the successors of Alexander, 311. Of Apollo, 344. n. Of Byzantium, 402. n. Of Constantinople, 411. Not suited for the Christian office, 411. Spoliation of, recommended, iii. 87. Restoration of, by Julian, 88. Destruction of, by Theodosius, 143. 145, et seq. 150, et seq. Alienation of the revenues of, 147. Some temples converted to the Christian worship, 149.

Tempter, the, i. 15.

Temptation, the, of our Lord, i. 152,

Time without bounds, 1. 66.
Timothy, circumcision of, i. 428.
Attends St. Paul in his Evangelical labours, 431. n. ii. 9. n. 10.
The Epistle to, 34. n. 41. n. 42.
Tiridates, king of Armenia, ii. 320, 321. His conversion by the Apostle Gregory, 322. War with Maximin, 322.
Titus, bold resistance of the Jews

Titus, bold resistance of the Jews against, i. 147. n. 374. Destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple by, 444.

, descon of the Cretan Church,

ii. 41.Tobit, apocryphal Book of, i. 70.Tongues, the gift of, for preaching the Gospel, i. 387.

Townson, Dr., argument of, i. 179.

Trachonitis, the, i. 111. n. Tradition, the Jewish, i. 59. 64. 120. 179. 190. 214. 257. 339.

been forewarned of the Fall of Jerusalem. i. 444.

Traditionists and Antitraditionists, Jewish sects of, i. 311.

Traditions, the Rabbinical, i. 444. Traditors, the, ii. 367.

Tragedy, iii. 448.

Trajan, the Emperor, ii. 49. 59. 59. 136. 139. His reply to Pliny on the subject of the Christians, 141, 142. n. 143. n. His Eastern wars, 149.

Transmigration of souls, ii. 99. 118. Tribute of Palestine and Syria to Cæsar, i. 137. 139. 312. The Roman coin shown to Jesus, when he declares it should be rendered unto Cæsar, 313.

Trinitarians, the Manicheans were, ii. 331. Their controversy with the Donatists, 364—375. 422. Effects of the Trinitarian controversy in the West, iii. 13. 139.

Trinity, various notions of the, ii. 325. Distinction of the Persons of the, 429. Doctrine of the, 430. iii. 42 n. Triumph of, 185. The more powerful ecclesiastical writers maintain it, 186.

Troas, St. Paul in, ii. 41. Trophimus, the Ephesian, i. 433. Tsabaism, or Star worship, i. 12. ii. 125. 311. Turcomans, the, ii. S11. S15. Turks, the, i. 429. n. Twelve Tables, Laws of the, ii. S59. Tyre, city of, i. 250. ii. S1. 292. Its church rebuilt, 298. Synod of, 453.

ULPHILAS, his version of the Scriptures into Gothic, iii. 136. n.
Unknown God, the, ii. 17, 18. n.
Unity, the Divine, i. 21. 45. 296.
416, 417. n. ii. 35. 82. iii. 264.
Ursacius, bishop of Singidunum, iii.
15. 17, 18.

VALCKENARR de Aristobulo Judæo, ii. 166. n.

Valens, the Emperor, reign of, iii. 109, et seq. Men of learning or philosophical pursuits prosecuted for inquiring the probable name of his successor, 120, et seq. Is baptized, 124. Crimes alleged against this emperor, 125. Interview of, with St. Basil, 125. His progress through Asia, 125. His death, 140.

, bishop of Mursa, iii. 15. 17,

Valentinian, reign of, iii. 109, et seq. His toleration, 111. His laws, 112. 380. His cruelty, 114.

II., the Emperor, iii.
139. 163. 168. Is murdered, 173.
Conjoint edict, 185. 247. He yields to St. Ambrose, who had refused the use of a church to Justina, 249. Anecdote of (the emperor, 250. n. His death, 262.
Valentinus, the Gnostic sectarian, ii.
118.

Valeria, wife of Galerius, ii. 260. 277. 294.

Valerian, the Emperor, persecution by, ii. 245, et seq. His cruel death, 254.

Vandals, the, embrace Christianity, iii. 138.

Varro, i. 36. n.

Venus Aphrodite, ii. 417. 419.

----- Urania, ii. 227.

Verticordia, i. 20. Verona, battle of, ii. 349.

Verus, Lucius, the Emperor, ii. 124. 179. His victories in Mesopotamia, &c., 180.

Vespasian, the Emperor, his vigour

